Student Opera 'Hansel, Gretel' Set for Friday

By JOAN BUFFINGTON
Chronicle News Editor

Hansel, Gretel and cast onstage Friday are few among many undergraduates involved in the conception, writing, direction and production of the first completely student-run creative arts function of its kind on campus.

The festival Friday and Saturday includes a stylization of Humperdinck's opera, Hansel and Gretel, and an art exhibit. Success—or failure—of the production, for the Administration, will depend on the quality of the production and of student response, according to producer-director Carolyn Krause '64.

Hansel and Gretel in its present form is stylized to portray a child's world of fancy. Miss Krause and Frank Bennett '64 chose this work to integrate creative arts on campus because of its place in the tradition of Christmas. The two student writers omitted the realistic cruelty of Grimm's tale to give meaning to this production at Christmas time.

Onstage, a cast principally of freshmen and sophomores generally new to University audiences will, in the director's view, "speak for themselves." Jean Mayo '66 and Frank Glass '67 take the title roles, beset by Nancy Temple '65 as the Gobbler Ogress.

Reeve Love '65 and Mike Schipke '67, Mother and Father, will join the Sandman, Fred Kaufhold '68, and the Angel, Sherry Safford '67. In the Children's Chorus are Jerry Savers '64, Sam Bedinger '67, Carolyn McFarlane '67, Ann Horton '66, Sarah Ramsey '65, Mall Tuul '65 and Mary Louise Briscoe '66.

Set designs involved Patrick Mauney '65, Savers, Darrelline Haynes '67 and Miss Krause under the direction of Larry Misenheimer '65.

In the orchestra pit, music director Bennett will lead members of the University Symphony Orchestra.

Production of the arts festival involves students backstage from various fields of the creative arts. Bennett, Misenheimer, business manager Tom Pratt '67, lighting director Chuck Colver '64, admissions manager Mauney and publicity chairman Edward Lotspeich '65 worked with other students on the presentation.

Tickets are now on sale in Page box office at $1.

THE OGRESS in "Hansel and Gretel," otherwise known as Nancy Temple '65, pauses onstage during a rehearsal for the opera to be presented Friday and Saturday.

To Discuss Revision

Honor Code Forum

Students will have the opportunity to discuss the honor system and its proposed revision at an open forum tonight at 8:30 p.m. in room 130 of the new sociology and psychology building.

The heads of the three student government associations and either the chairmen of the judicial boards or their representatives will answer questions from the audience.

The proposed honor code revision was passed by the MSGA Senate last Tuesday and will come before the WSGA Legislature tonight prior to the forum. The proposal will be studied by the Student-Faculty-Administration Committee in its meeting Thursday. It must be passed by the Undergraduate Faculty Council to go into effect.

Although it retains the same philosophy as the present honor system, the revision clarifies and expands some of its points. The proposal, drawn up by the Committee to Evaluate the Honor System, keeps the requirement that every student in a class must vote to accept the code. In explanatory paragraphs, the committee added that each student will have had time to acquaint himself fully with it and will be able to understand its meaning and values before voting on the system. It continues, "A basic precept of this code . . . is the voluntariness of individual participation. There is no desire to force the student who is firmly against the system to accept it."

Each student who accepts the honor system is to sign the pledge, "On my honor, I have neither given nor received aid, nor have I seen anyone give or receive aid on this test or paper" at the end of every test or paper. If necessary the second part of the pledge may be replaced with " . . . but I suspect cheating (or plagiarism) and will follow through in accordance with the honor code."

Bunyan S. Womble, chairman of the Board of Trustees, will install Douglas Maitland Knight as Duke University's fifth president in inauguration ceremonies Wednesday, December 11, at 10:30 a.m. in the Indoor Stadium. No classes will be held that day until 2 p.m.

Dr. Knight, who was elected president of the University November 11, 1962, assumed office this September. He will deliver the principal address Wednesday.

Inaugural Procession

Pelham Wilder Jr., professor of chemistry and chairman of the Inauguration Committee, announced that the inauguration will begin with an academic procession headed by University marshal James L. Price. Included in the procession will be the President, the Board of Trustees, the academic delegates, the Provost and assistant Provosts, the deans of the faculties, members of the faculty and student leaders.

Howard Wilkinson, University chaplain, will give the invocation. Following the formal installation by Mr. Womble, James T. Cleland, Dean of the Chapel, will make the Inaugural Prayer. In addition, Wilder noted, there will be "brief words of greeting" from Kip McK. Espy '64, president of the Men's Student Government Association; William B. Hamilton, chairman of the Academic Council; and Leon S. Ivey, president of the Alumni Association.

The University Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Allan H. Bone, will play for the inauguration. Immediately before and after the ceremonies Antoine Brees, former carillonier of the University and currently carillonier at the Bok Tower in Florida, will present a concert.

Inauguration Committee

The Inauguration Committee, which has formulated and executed plans for the inauguration, consists of Wilder, chairman; Fred H. Whitener, director of special events, executive secretary; Richard Bindewald, representing the Medical Center; Dr. Frances C. Brown, president of the Faculty Club; Crawford Goodwin, secretary of the University; W. B. Hamilton, chairman of the Academic Council; Alan K. Manchester, Dean of Trinity College; James L. Serge Lentz Tells Of Red China Tour

By DON BELLMAN
Chronicle News Editor

Monday evening Serge Lentz, the noted editor of Paris Match, told a Page Auditorium audience of his trip through and impressions of Communist China. Lentz is the most recent of very few Western journalists who have penetrated the interior of Red China. Posing as a textile buyer, Lentz got a red carpet tour of Shanghai, Canton, Peking and various rural areas.

Lentz pointed out at the beginning of his talk that one of the worst things to do in China is to be a Russian. The attitude of the average Chinese to Russians is "downright violent," he said, adding that while he had little trouble getting his extensive camera collection into China, a Russian traveling companion didn't fare so well with a novel by French author Francoise Sagan.

This attitude he said was caused by a tremendous propaganda campaign against the Russians. He mentioned two peasants he met who believed that if insects destroyed their crops, "they had been sent by the Russians."

One of the most important propaganda drives, Lentz said, is based on the example of an orphaned army truck driver who became a national hero when he killed himself in a truck accident. The example of Sergeant Lee Fang, who treasured his truck "as the apple of his eye," successfully causes admiring Chinese to follow in his footsteps in the service of their country.

Lentz described the "average" Chinese. He mentioned that while he might starve on what he eats, it is "quite enough to keep the Chinese happy. There is no starvation in China." He works six days a week and gets an hour off for lunch and three ten minute breaks for tea. He doesn't belong to the Party, but wishes he does. Party membership is "the great reward," Lentz says.

While he may have problems such as housing, the average Chinese, Lentz says, is "living better than ever before." Furthermore, he thinks Americans "are far worse off than he is." Lentz told of an evening in Shanghai when he and a Chinese official were arguing over whether French workers have cars. Finally the Chinese told the Frenchman that French workers did not have cars and, "You're just being blinded by imperialist propaganda."

Lentz then showed many slides, including one of the monument to the Chinese who conquered Mt. Everest. Then, commenting briefly on political considerations, he said the Sino-Soviet split is here to stay, as is communism in China. He said that Chou-En-Lai is the real Chinese boss and China will step toward a "softer socialism when he dies."

He finished by stating that the Chinese will have the atomic bomb. They have the facilities and the test site in the Gobi Desert where the winds are "blowing in the right direction, toward India." What are they going to do with it? The Chinese answered him a chilling smile of superiority.

Pep Rally To Send off Team To W. Virginia Tournament

A special pep rally is planned to give the basketball team a rousing send-off tomorrow morning to the West Virginia Centennial Basketball Tournament Friday and Saturday.

The rally, sponsored by the Pep Board and the Durham Chamber of Commerce, will begin at 9 a.m. in front of the Chapel and will last about 20 minutes, according to Charles Jackson '64, co-chairman of the Pep Board.

University President Douglas M. Knight will wish the team well on behalf of the University community. Mayor R. W. Grabarek of Durham will also speak and the cheerleaders and pep band will help arouse student spirit. Coach Vic Bubas and team captain Jeff Mullins '64 will reply to the speeches. The Blue Devils will play Ohio State Friday night.

The team will be brought by bus from the Indoor Stadium to the Chapel. No other traffic except University busses will be allowed in the quad during the rally.

Jackson urges all students to come out for the send-off as it is "a befitting way to begin the season and show one's spirit before the next home game December 14."

Dr. Monpenny Defines Areas Of Student Academic Freedom

"To all too many people educational institutions are primarily agencies for inculcating the habits and values which will continue the kind of society which they find comfortable," Dr. Phillip Monpenny asserted in the current issue of the Law School quarterly.

Writing on student academic freedom Monpenny, who is a professor of political science at the University of Illinois, found the student a member of the community of scholars and developed standards of academic freedom from this. The entire issue of Law and Contemporary Problems is devoted to academic freedom.

MONPENNY looked on the academic community as "providing some protection against possible consequences of independent action while still providing conditions which encourage exercise of independent judgment." He continued, "The parallel of constitutional freedom which should exist on campus are not easy for administrators to accept."

The only restriction he saw necessary on speeches, speakers, meetings, leaflet distribution, picketing and parading should be those necessary to protect safety and property.

IN VIEWING THE STUDENT as a member of the community of scholars, he commented, "The existence of strong emotions and great hostility only underlines the need for the campus to follow a less restrictive set of standards than the community at large."

Monpenny declared that "student publications should enjoy a similar freedom of publication without advance censorship or subsequent sanction because of faculty disapproval of content or style of expression." He recommended that student editorship and management be under the control of a student board.

THE AUTHOR FOUND THAT "The principal source of difficulty in the field of student publications is the assumption that because it is a student product the college or university is in some manner responsible for it. . . . If it is clear that students act on their own responsibility, only the most bigoted can insist on institutional responsibility."

"Every teacher must ask himself whether the information at his disposal about students must not be guarded as carefully against unnecessary disclosure as is the physician's knowledge of his patients," Monpenny stated.

How To Knock Your Girl's Eye Out For Christmas

MIGHT GIVE HER A USED CAR

A snappy little jalopy would be a right impressive gift, especially if you have time to give it a coat of paint and a tune-up—but think, chum—for the same money you could give her a hundred of the best new novels at the Intimate, and each one gift-wrapped prettier than the last. Now that's what we call impressive!

MIGHT GIVE HER A MIDGET SUBMARINE

Our Comparative Shoppers tell us that in Texas you can get a snazzy little one-woman sub for under twenty thousand bucks. Impressive, huh? Well chum, the same money would buy her a truck-load of the most expensive art books at the Intimate, all wrapped up Christmas-like, with enough left over for a book-mark or two. What woman wouldn't prefer the world's loveliest books to a submarine?

OR A SOLID MINK YOU-KNOW-WHAT.

Folks tell us that Mink Melts the Female Heart, and that it is Worth it's Weight in Gold. Maybe so, but for the price of just a little bitty chunk of mink, you can buy her a shelffull of books like THIS IS MY BE-LOVED and FOR YOU WITH LOVE. If she's nice, she'll let you read 'em to her and all that. Try reading a mink to a woman!

Will you be able to give me all the things I crave—like pizza pie and chow mein?

2. I've lined up a terrific job. There's a choice of training programs, good starting salary, challenging work, and the chance to move up. That's Equitable.

I agree—but what's the company's name?

3. Equitable—it's Equitable.

It certainly is. It's also fair, square, and just. But I would still like to know the name of the company.

4. We're not communicating. I keep telling you it's Equitable—and you keep asking what's the name.

I keep agreeing your job sounds good. But you stubbornly refuse to tell me who you're going to work for.

5. Can it be you never listen to my words? Is it possible that what I thought was a real relationship was but a romantic fantasy?

'Residential Institution'

Every so often we hear the term "residential institution" mentioned. The direct application of the term is to the University policy requiring campus residence for all students. Although overcrowded dormitories have forced the University to rescind this regulation temporarily, the accent of Duke life still points toward campus. Beyond this immediate application we feel the use of the term generates certain implications which are often overlooked by student and administrator alike. Since Duke believes its students should live on campus, the University must believe that this advances the overall goals of the University. In short, residing in an intellectual community is an essential part of learning. However subtle or implicit, this theory of a "residential institution" is an important one.

A Self-Sufficient Campus?

Clearly, to be a residential university a campus must be largely self-sufficient, or else, proximate to areas which fill in the needs not supplied by the University. Duke, we think, fails on both counts. While the University does provide a place to sleep and eat and study—not to mention a barber shop, a soda fountain, a bank, a restaurant, a store and a post office—this impressive list of services and facilities is misleading. Recreational areas are virtually non-existent. Study dates and television—admittedly, two enriching experiences—are the only sources of campus social life. Durham, effectively separated from the center of campus by large tracts of Duke-owned land, is too far away for real convenience. For the three-fourths of the student body without cars, a trip downtown is an afternoon's journey despite the courageous service performed by the local transit system.

Penal Or Residential?

With an important part of life denied the majority of students here, this institution occasionally seems more penal than residential. Nor do we place too much emphasis on social and recreational affairs. These sections of life stress one very important part of any university—conversation. Conversation is the informal, unorganized equivalent of class and lecture. And if some one doubts the intellectual or academic benefit of conversation at Duke, perhaps it is because Duke possesses no facilities to effectively stimulate conversation. Commons rooms and chapter rooms, while admittedly useful in this area, do not allow any real campus-wide interchange. Freshman talks to freshman; fraternity brother talks to fraternity brother; and an independent, who has the worst lot of all, talks to his roommate.

The Proposed Remedies

Some steps are, however, being taken to correct this situation. A new University center will be built on West in the next decade. Already plans are pushing forward. A student committee, which last year attempted to determine the needs of the various campus organizations, will this year tackle some of the thornier problems we touched on above. A substantial selection of the student body will be asked to take part in a poll to determine the needs for increased services, such as a larger Dope Shop and post office, and for new facilities, which may fill the social void which exists now for much of the campus. The final results of this poll will be presented to the appropriate administrative committee, where we hope, the findings of the student commission will be taken seriously.

Facilities, however, seem to be only one part of the problem. A long hard look should be taken at those rules and regulations which make the Duke campus an "unnatural society." The on-campus drinking ban and the outmoded parietal (dormitory) restrictions come especially to mind. While in each case we see the dangers inherent in liberalizing the rules, we think that some let-ups might be justified. For instance, we hesitate to state unequivocally that drinking be allowed in the dormitories, fearing that a lack of moderation on the part of the few might affect the many; nevertheless, we think that the advantages of a beer garden or a rathskeller on campus would outweigh any possible disruptive effect. Similarly, a relaxing of the rigid rules prohibiting the presence of women in West's dorms might go a long way toward making Duke the residential institution it pretends to be, and should be.

Letters to The Editor

'Moral Truth'

Editor, The Chronicle:

Shortly before Thanksgiving the Administration refused a charter to the Duke chapter of CORE, a charter which had been passed on favorably by all three student government associations. Among its objections was dissatisfaction with a section of the CORE constitution that states, "We recognize the responsibility on the part of the University to obey the laws of the State and Nation, provided that nothing in this section shall restrain the individual member from his independent search for moral truth."

THE REAL REASONS for this objection bear examination. Although there may be division within the bureaucratic elite on this point it is my conviction that the Administration, or at least the majority of it, does not really believe in "moral truth."

Furthermore any administrator worth his 13-member secretarial staff immediately shudders and turns pale sickly white at the mere thought of the implications of the phrase "independent search for moral truth."

—EVEN THE dissidents willing to grudgingly accept the reality of "moral truth" (which of course implies the existence of both truth and morality) believe that if such a thing exists it is to be determined by administrative committees. The decisions of these committees (amendable, of course) are to be distributed to the students through little printed sheets that appear in each student's mailbox. They are also to be expressed through such things as the East Turkey hours, "Code for Responsible Community Living," and "Code for College Journalism." (I find it hard to accept "Editors should always be well-bred," as an example of moral truth.)

IN THE LIGHT of this attitude I would like to suggest that the Administration include a statement in the catalog of the University to the effect, "The University has the right, and matriculation is an acknowledgment of that right, to decide the beliefs, ideas, and concepts of each of its undergraduates, as well as the proper methods which may be employed in implementing those beliefs. Any student whose thinking has been unsatisfactory to the University may be requested to withdraw without being notified as to the nature of his deviancy."

This, however, is unlikely to happen. Honesty and thought-control are seldom found together. Honesty is expected of a university. Thought-control isn't.

Alex Raybin '66

Not Extremists

Editor, The Chronicle:

The assassination of the President of the United States of America left most Americans in a state of grief and shock. In our endeavors to explain how such an unmitigated act could occur, it is ever so easy to simply blame "the people of America."

In reporting the reaction on our campus, you published several statements affirming the guilt specifically to "every radical group" and more generally to "every person . . . who has contributed to a state of unrest so great that the President . . . could be assassinated." In the course of this theme was expanded in an attempt to dramatize the murder of the President, the bombings in Birmingham, and Duke student demonstrations against the Chief Justice were all manifestations of "a horrible state of unrest" in our country.

Yours is not the only voice that is propagating the malignancies of universal (in the U. S. A. at least) guilt. Paci-fistic "peacenik," Norman J. Whitney (recent speaker before the YWCA forum) reportedly said: "The assassination was the human embodiment of a nation turned to stone, in the sense that victims of military power are dehumanized." The almighty New York Times referred to the assassination as "the shame all America must bear for the spirit of madness and hate." Even recovering Governor John Connally, in a bedside news conference on closed-circuit TV, remarked: "It was a manifestation of extremism . . . that cancerous growth affecting all of us."

Since any attempt to extract a reasonable cause from such a feeble character as Oswald has now been made impossible, the intellectuals among us, out of grief compounded by confusion, try to explain the causal affects of this deed in terms of the so-called national "state of unrest." The obvious fallacy in these condemnations is that the murder of the President was the act of a deranged mind; an atypical case and a manifestation of any "unrest" and/or "extremism" in our country.

I wonder if all those who would accuse their neighbors of having blood on their hands have forgotten who (or should it be "what") killed our President? Surely no member of D.A.R., the American Legion, the John Birch Society, or even the A.D.A. did such an unwarranted deed. No, the killer was a self-proclaimed "Marxist," a man more at home in the U.S.S.R. than in the U.S.A., a member of the Communist front "Fair Play for Cuba Committee."

(Let me interject here on a point about this "committee." This pro-Castro organization ran a full page advertisement in the New York Times pleading moral support—not unlike certain signs in the Freeman Limousines. One of its sympathizers, and even signatory of the ad, was Norman Mailer. He was summoned before the House Un-American Activities Committee to explain his indiscretion. He pleaded Liberal and was released. Where have you heard the name Norman Mailer before? You remember—Naked and the Dead, etc. His name also came up at this year's Symposium. Who was it that defended him so gallantly? That's right, Hold Me, Hold Me. Which all goes to prove none other than Liberals of a feather stick together.)

Lee Harvey Oswald was a Communist sympathizer of dubious rational capabilities (not unlike most Communist sympathizers), and his act should not be looked upon as manifest-

A Time For Crying

The scene is painted,
The streets are lined,
The walks are filled,
With the flesh of life.

Before them rolls on wheels
With solemn sound
A man like them who Lived, and loved, and was President of the nation.

Another fired a fatal shot;
He fell, his living flesh
Torn asunder.

He died; no one could alter
The deed, once done.

Or silence the echoes as
They flew about the world.

Many spoke, but none could
Fill the void of silence,
The empty hollow of Human grief as it rose
In the hearts of a nation.

A woman wept, her
Children by her side;
Grief and grave distress
Were hers alone to bear—
Her husband was dead.

Gone, vanquished by a
Thudding bullet,
Gone, but loved by the weeping hearts

Of a bereaved nation,
Let me remember, by the deep struck
Minds of a humbled people.

—Bill Nichols

ing "a horrible state of unrest" or "extremism among American or 'extremism' among Americans.

"extremism" among Americans. The only doubt I have in my mind is how can a government allow such un-American individuals to walk around endangering our way of life. If there exists a "spirit of madness and hate" in America, it is not an indigenous characteristic of our national way of life.

Bargain Basement

Editor, The Chronicle:

The Administration's Bargain Basement, in its usual lethargic manner, has for the third straight year directed its towering, incompetent bureaucracy at the students. A list of the Basement's Bargains for the last three years includes the following: the benefit to upperclassmen from the renovation of freshman dorms; another comfortable, luxurious Gothic dormitory, built from the outside in, due for completion in the Fall of 1963; and the raising of room rents, a real bargain for students who are anticipating the miraculous transformation and renovation "within two to three years."

TO BE MORE specific, the Housing Bureau is at it again. In the frosh dorms we have acoustic perfection, to aid the student in his intellectual conquest, easy-eye walls in aquamarine and pink, fluorescent lights, "usually working," and posturepedic mattresses. All this, and getting a nightcap is even easier with the well-lit closets. Then, bright and early the energetic students are awakened by the sound of their House Mother, trundling in to make sure that "all of her little brood" are keeping clean, tidy rooms—no messes, no pictures stuck on walls, no cooking appliances, ad nauseum.

WE ARE ON our way, men, to the culmination of a building project which has been in the making for decades—a completely new, aesthetically oriented dormitory, to be built after the completion of a new President's house. Rumor has it that the exquisite beauty of Gothic architecture will be combined with inviolate practicality. No more need to bang your head against the four-foot ceilings. Maybe, to even giant-sized rooms which will hold more than one bed, one desk, one bookcase, and two people.

Closer to Emancipation Day are the renovations which are expected to sweep over the upperclass dorms shortly. Can you picture the beauty of this utopia—the zenith of luxury, comfort and compatibility? Of course, there is "the minor matter of funds." Room rents rose last year from 12% to 25 per cent, and now some of us are even fortunate enough to have the privilege of paying $300 for that same remodeled maid's closet, complete with peeling paint, priceless antiques, and one bath per twelve men. And we have one phone for only 47 men! Our housemothers are remarkably friendly, chatting pleasantly with students and maids. They even have a "same old, same old, Check," the object being who can get the most negative checks for sloppy roomkeeping. Most things count—dirty clothes on floor, in chairs, or hanging from the ceiling, textbooks piled high on your desk, animals in your room (dead ones count more than the living), etc.

BUT SOMETIME soon, maybe we'll get our money's worth—a place to study and relax, not a ciliate the student you can eliminate the student body completely and, thus, preserve the beauty of the Gothic gargoyles for the annual flood of obnoxious high school harrys. But then again, sir, it's your job, isn't it? All I do is live here.

Chronicle To Obtain Allotment To Cover Advertising Losses

The Publications Board voted yesterday afternoon to allot the Chronicle enough money to cover all its losses through November 30 and to cover any future loss due to a decline in cigarette advertising.

The Chronicle had asked the Board for $4500, $1500 of which is its normal share of the University subsidy and $3000 of which would make up the losses from a decrease in national advertising. Chronicle business manager Thomas Montgomery '64 pointed out that national advertising was handled through an agency and the Chronicle could do nothing on its own to increase it.

Committee Recommendations

Finance committee chairman Craig W. Worthington '65 had recommended that the paper be given sufficient money to cover losses in national advertising but not local, since any decreases here could be attributed to this year's business staff. The Board felt that since it had directed the Chronicle at past meetings to continue normal publication policies, it was responsible for all losses until November 30.

The motion made clear that this did not establish a precedent and would be in effect only this year.

Finance Suggestions

Board members suggested that the entire problem of publication finances be investigated with consideration being given to increasing the publications' share of the general fee or asking the University for additional subsidy money. Stuart Barr '64, Chanticleer editor, suggested that the Board consider selling all publications instead of receiving automatic student subscriptions through the general fee.

1962-63 Salaries

In other business, the Board voted to pay full Chronicle salaries for 1962-63 since an additional advertising account had just been collected. Reports from the Bassett Lecture Series Committee and the constitution committee were postponed until the next meeting.

In a special meeting just before Thanksgiving vacation, the Publications Board began discussion of its constitutional revision. At that time the Board passed several articles of the constitution but left the by-laws and parts of the constitution for later consideration. Debate centered particularly around which publications the Board should control and whether it should exercise the same degree of control over all types of publications. The present constitution gives the Board jurisdiction over all student publications.

CORE Changes Constitution

After being accepted by the three student government associations and rejected by the Administration, the proposed constitution of the University chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality was again brought before the group in its Monday night meeting.

Following the suggestion of the deans, the chapter voted to make certain revisions and clarifications of the constitution. A statement will be presented to the Administration clarifying the chapters' relation to the national CORE and establishing its local autonomy.

The statement regarding a member's right to violate a state law if he feels it is unconstitutional will be stricken from the CORE constitution. It was brought out in discussion that this omission is not a compromise of principle, but rather the elimination of an unnecessary statement of what the presence of a CORE chapter implies.

General membership in CORE has been opened to full-time, part-time and special students and all University employees.

The revised constitution will be re-submitted to the deans for approval and granting of the charter.

The chapter is considering several direct action projects with special emphasis on the voter registration drive in Durham. Because of an upcoming bond issue and the 1964 gubernatorial and presidential elections, CORE is trying to inform the residents of this area of the laws regarding voting and to register them as voters. According to John Bradley of North Carolina College this campaign will especially be carried on in the eastern part of the state where there are enough Negroes to control the vote in that area.

CORE is also continuing to investigate the segregation in the wards of Duke Hospital and the possibilities of relieving the situation.

Attending the meeting was James T. McCain, director of organization for the national CORE. McCain insisted that the University chapter, the newest of the 95 chapters, "remain non-violent, take the challenge, and use direct action for what is right and wrong in this country."

Project Nicaragua Beckons Students for Service Work

Students participating in Project Nicaragua this year will have a choice of working in Managua or in Pearl Lagoon, a small community on the eastern coast of Nicaragua. Project Nicaragua will last from June 28 to August 16. It is designed to give University students an intensive first-hand experience of life in a Latin American country and in a small way to contribute to a more stable international community.

Managua Project

In Managua students will work in the American Baptist Mission, a 1100-pupil elementary school and a 50-bed hospital. There will be opportunities to teach physical education, art, music and English, to assist with the care of patients in the hospital and to begin a community recreation and education program in a slum area in Managua.

The work of the group in Pearl Lagoon will involve community service projects including recreation, sanitary education, teaching arts, crafts and English, construction of sanitary latrines and furthering the work of the medical clinic established by University students last summer.

There will be opportunities to travel in Central America and to meet people in all facets of Nicaraguan life.

The Project will cost each participant $375 including round-trip air fare from Miami. It will be limited to 15 students. Applications and further information may be obtained from Reverend Jack Carroll, Methodist Student Center; Reverend Jim Stines, Baptist Student Center; the YWCA office; or the Chapel Office.

Handel's 'Messiah' Set For Next Week

Handel's Messiah will be performed by the Chapel Choir Sunday at 4 p.m. and next Tuesday at 8 p.m. This year marks the 31st annual presentation of the oratorio. The performance in the Chapel is open to the public.

James Young, acting director of the choir, will direct, with University Organist Mildred L. Hendrix at the organ.

Soloists for the first performance will be Byung K. Kwon, bass-baritone; John Hanks, tenor; Tina Pfohl, contralto; and Mrs. J. Herbert Waldorp Jr., soprano.

'Y' Handbooks Now Available

The Young's Men's Christian Association, for the first time in 'Y' history, has gotten the student handbooks out before Christmas vacation, announced 'Y' president James T. O'Kelley '64.

The handbooks were distributed to East dormitories Monday night and were distributed on West by the maids yesterday and today. Handbooks have been placed in the Men's Graduate Center and Epworth for graduate students and have been sent to all the departments for faculty members. Additional copies have been distributed to all the Administrative offices.

O'Kelley stated that any student, faculty member or organization which does not receive a copy of the handbook before Friday should write the 'Y', Box 4834 D. S. providing name and address. A copy will be mailed immediately.

An innovation this year has been the listing of all students alphabetically, without separation according to the different colleges.

O'Kelley noted that he was particularly pleased with the work of this year's staff under the editorship of Thomas Furness '65.

Duke Faculty Authors, Edits Recent Works

Four members of the University faculty have recently authored or edited books.

Dr. Allan P. Sinder of the political science department has edited Change in the Contemporary South, a collection of essays on such problems as race relations, Democratic and Republican politics, Negro voter registration and political realignment. Sinder summarizes some trends in Southern life in a section of his own.

The head of the World Role of Law Center, Arthur Larson, has examined the problems and opportunities of a disarmed world in a group of papers entitled A Warless World. Twelve statesmen, historians, philosophers and thinkers, including U Thant, Secretary-General of the United Nations, have considered this problem. The views of several Russian thinkers are given in the appendix.

Anglo Saxon Riddles of the Exeter Book, translated by Dr. Paul F. Baum, James B. Duke Professor Emeritus of English, is the first English edition of the riddles in verse. The original book was written by Leofric, Bishop of Exeter, who died in 1072.

Dr. Brainerd Currie, William R. Perkins Professor of Law, has written Selected Essays on the Conflict of Laws which points out that the heart of the traditional system for conflict of laws is a body of universal rules for the selection of the applicable law.

Campus Notes

Blue Devils Trample Penn State

By JACK FEET

The Penn State Nittany Lions, a team its coach John Egli called the best he has had in 10 years, were all but humiliated as the aggressive, Mullins-led Blue Devils romped to a 92-62 opening game rout.

All-American Jeff Mullins, who hit Duke's first seven points, finished with 25 markers in steering the talented and depth-laden Devils to their win. Coach Vic Bubas continually shifted his line-up so that 11 Blue Devils hit the scoring column. Trailing Mullins, Buzzy Harrison connected for 14 points, with six of them coming at the start of the second half.

Brent Kitching, showing the confidence he has needed all along, swished the nets for 11 points while Jay Buckley and Hack Tison collected 10 and 8 points, respectively.

The story of the Blue Devil victory centered about the Big Blue's tenacious man-to-man defense, the 11 tremendous depth, their sparkling shooting, and their strong rebounding.

Coach Bubas wasn't kidding when he called this Big Blue five the best man-to-man defensive team he has ever coached. The team's tremendous hustle and quick switching-off constantly rattled the overpowered Nittany Lions, causing them to make poor passes and to force their shots from 20 feet out or farther (perhaps, partly accounting for their sub-par 32.8 per cent shooting average).

The Blue Devils must certainly have one of the deepest squads in college basketball today. With Kitching, Marin, Vacendak, Harscher, Ferguson and Allen, Coach Bubas had an unusually strong bench to utilize.

The Big Blue had a field day with their shooting, sporting an impressive 52.8 field goal percentage. The team shot 20-30 footers with great accuracy while mixing up the Nittany Lion defense with powerful drives and short jump and hook shots around the bucket.

Penn State's big Tom Malinchak's being from the start in foul trouble hampered the Lions on the boards. At the final gun, the Blue Devils had 53 individual rebounds compared to the Lion's 30.

However, the game wasn't all Duke as Penn State did look very good in spots. Their high jumping forward Carver Clinton popped the nets for 21 while their fine guard Bob Weiss hit for 19 points. A let down for Coach John Egli must have been his highly touted guard, Captain Bob Donato, who collected only 4 points, hitting just 1-6 from the field.

The Blue Devils showed they plan to run with the ball this season as they quickly came up court, fast-breaking at every chance. The game was a real "crowd pleaser" for the near-capacity gathering. A typical play was one in which Hack Tison plucked the ball out of the air when a defenseless Nittany Lion drove the lane (although Tison was standing behind the driver!); Tison immediately whipped the ball down court and Buckley scored the bucket with a two-hand dunk, much to the pleasure of the screaming crowd.

In the preliminary, Chuck Daly's boys won their tightly fought battle over East Carolina 82-74, giving Daly his first victory as a college coach.

Bob Verga led the Imps with 23 points and 13 rebounds. Close behind, big Bob Reidy chalked up 21 tallies, hauling in 16 rebounds. Stuart McKaig displayed his usual hustle and team play connecting for 16 markers. Another Baby Blue sharpshooter, Dick Alvarez, collected 12 points, pumping in several key free-throws.

Although East Carolina had three more field goals than the Blue Imps, the Imps scored 14 more free-throws to decide the win.

Freund Wins Football Figuring Contest by Single Encounter

After a grueling ten weeks, the fiercely competitive Chronicle Football Figuring Contest ended almost the way it started. One hundred games were forecast by Chronicle Editor Gary Nelson, Chronicle Sports Editor Art Winston, and intruder Hank Freund. The difference among the three was the smallest possible. Freund, with a 67-29-4 record led the way, just an extra point ahead of Winston's 66-30-4 mark and Nelson's 65-31-4 performance. In a comparison with the records of local forecasters in the Durham papers and the Daily Tarheel, the Chronicle reigned supreme.

In the initial week Winston called the East Carolina upset of Wake Forest on the nose. Freund prognosticated the Maryland upset of the Air Force Academy and Nelson predicted the end of the Wake Forest victory famine, their upset triumph over South Carolina.

On the other side of the ledger, some classic forecasts were called. Champion Freund felt certain that West Virginia would knock off the overrated Navy. Navy swamped the Mountaineers by almost 50 points. The board of experts unanimously believed that North Carolina State would humiliate the Tarheels, but the score indicated the reverse. Ohio State proved the most difficult team to predict, as Nelson, Winston and Freund combined for a 3-9 record in games involving Woody Hayes' squad.

Intramural Bowling

The intramural bowling season began Monday afternoon. For the first week, all bowlers are asked to be at Fairlane-Sportland Alleys at 3 p.m. instead of 3:30, so that the manager of the lanes can explain the policy that will be followed during the season, and so that league secretaries may be chosen.

Men who have cars are asked to pick up all men needing rides in front of the KA and Phi Kap sections. Rides given to freshmen are only to and from the bowling lanes, and are not to be individually prearranged. Any deviation from this rule will constitute an infraction of IFC regulations and will be treated as such. The success of the intramural bowling program will depend on how well everyone cooperates with this transportation program.

Coach Hails New Talent

Wrestlers Start Season Today

This afternoon the varsity and freshman grapplers competed in their first dual meet of the season against Virginia. Usually a one-sided affair, this year's competition could have easily resulted in an upset against U. Va. due to the acquisition of a number of fine sophomores from last year's talented frosh team to the Duke varsity.

Notably, Sam Walker (123 pounds), Pete Boehm (130) and John Holder (137) should carry on the winning tradition of the Duke lightweight established last year by Jim Biersfeld (130) and Jeff Lee (137) who are temporarily out at this time with injuries.

According to Coach Carmen Falcone, new talent is also evident at the middleweights with Jim Moreng (167), Jon Clark (157) and Bud Reynolds (147). Last year's outstanding varsity wrestler Dick Lam (177) will be in action as usual with expectations for another fine season. Luke Sharpe, last year's great freshman heavyweight, will not wrestle due to an injured arm. The probable replacement will be Jim Hobert or Bud White.

Coach Bill Harvey's freshman squad, as in the past, seems to be loaded with talent led by Pete Diltz (130), Illinois state champion, and Malcolm McAlpin (137), a top wrestler from Long Island.

The meet began at 3:30 today in the Indoor Stadium.

There will be a meeting of the Chronicle sports staff tomorrow afternoon at 1:30 in the Chronicle office. All reporters are required to attend and any newcomers for winter sports are invited.
