An editorial

Vigilance now

The Vigil has ended. The vigil was meant to be simultaneously a method for gaining the four demands and a memorial to Dr. King. More than anything, it was a call for change in spirit - a call for the University as an institution to take a position of justice on the campus. The demand for justice is not limited to the issue at hand, nor is it limited to the present struggle. It is the demand that the University, as an institution, take a stand for justice because it is the right thing to do.

The demand as generally presented because that the fraternity men voted down the reasons for an amended proposal at the Vigil, Kerry Roche discussed men felt that "The participants in the Vigil don't have a moral right to demand too strong." He explained that the Greek system is often used to support irrational and anti-social sentiments. The vigil ended, but it was a call for change in spirit - a call for the University as an institution to take a position of justice on the campus.

Yesterday's Chronicle carried the AIH Inter iTaternally Council preparing a statement on segregated housing. The council's statement is a call for the University as an institution to take a position of justice on the campus. The vigil ended, but it was a call for change in spirit - a call for the University as an institution to take a position of justice on the campus.

Extra

The Duke Chronicle

Durham, North Carolina

Thursday, April 11, 1968

We must never return to that university

Four day silent vigil ends, tacit accord reached by protesters

By RICHARD SHERWOOD

The vigil has ended. After 4 days of the gentle unobtrusive demonstrations that had grown from loud picketing, students presented a list of demands to Dr. John D. Sullivan, a Religion professor, who reminded the students, "You are not alone. You are the future of this institution."

The students presented a list of demands to Dr. John D. Sullivan, a Religion professor, who reminded the students, "You are not alone. You are the future of this institution."

SULLIVAN URGED THE STUDENTS

The adopted provisions also include "carrying the argument of the vigil to the classroom," to encourage students to support the goals of the vigil, and "to aid in achieving the upper purposes of the university," to support the goals of the vigil.

"MONEY WILL BE RAISED by running буков on the quad, by personally canvassing students in the quad and downtown, and by selling "a union can get nothing (or these things) from this University," according to a statement from the vigil leaders.

The administration will be invited to "search their consciences" and "practice such morality," stated the resolution. The vigil proceeded without incident.

The vigil proceeded without incident. The administration will be invited to "search their consciences" and "practice such morality," stated the resolution. The vigil proceeded without incident.

Dining hall strike goes into 3rd day

By CAROLYN ARNOLD

Strikes by the a c c o u n t i n g and the executive board of the United Student Union on the campus have continued for the second day. The striking students continued to protest the administration's failure to address their demands.

The administration has not addressed the students' demands. The striking students continued to protest the administration's failure to address their demands.

The administration has not addressed the students' demands. The striking students continued to protest the administration's failure to address their demands.

The administration has not addressed the students' demands. The striking students continued to protest the administration's failure to address their demands.

The administration has not addressed the students' demands. The striking students continued to protest the administration's failure to address their demands.
The vigil logistics were all changed as needed.

---

By WIGGLES TUMP

Outside observers have consistently expressed concerns about the vigil organizers' decision to change logistics in response to the University's demands. Many students feel it must have been too much hassle to have people think that the vigil was over. But the idea behind changing logistics is to keep the vigil going end-to-end.

Interestingly, every aspect of the vigil was changed in response to the University's demands. The vigil moved from its original location to a nearby park. The organizers also changed the time of the vigil to ensure that it would not interfere with the University's schedule. The organizers also made sure that the vigil was well organized and that it was being done in a safe and orderly manner.

The organizers have been very concerned about the University's demands and have been working hard to ensure that the vigil continues to be a peaceful and effective protest. They have been very proactive in responding to the University's demands and have been working closely with the University to ensure that the vigil continues to be a successful protest.

The vigil is expected to continue for at least one more week, and the organizers are hoping for continued support from the community.

---

Negotiations seek a better bargain

By MIKE O'BRIEN

The negotiations between the University and the Vigil leaders are coming to an end, and the final outcome will be determined by the next meeting of the University's Board of Trustees. The University has been very determined to get a deal, and the Vigil has been equally determined to get a better bargain.

The University has offered a number of concessions, including the creation of a new position for the Vigil leaders, the increase in the number of hours they can work, and the creation of a new fund to support the Vigil. The Vigil has been very determined to get a better bargain, and the negotiations have been very difficult.

The negotiations are expected to continue for at least another week, and the final outcome will be determined by the next meeting of the University's Board of Trustees.

---

The vigil logistics were all changed as needed.

---

Class boycott is effective

---