Rally last night 'keeps the faith'

By TOM DWIGGINS

"You have shown us that the administration cannot be trusted, where moral needs are concerned, especially when moral needs conflict with financial needs," Dr. Charles Tanford told the Vigil rally Thursday night.

The Keep the Faith rally was the first meeting of the students in the silent Vigil since it disbanded Thursday morning with a March to East Campus from the main quad and back.

After singing, the rally opened with a progress report of the dining halls strike by Myrna Washington. She said that in every department, union workers were out 100 percent. Of the two reasons for striking, $1.60 minimum wage and collective bargaining, she said, the second was the most important.

This is for protection after the strike, she told the rally. "We feel that we should have a say in what happens to union employees."

DR. JOHN CELL, cautioned the Vigil not to alienate the faculty. They must be brought into the movement, he said, because they are of great help in changing their minds.

Dr. Dennis B. Amos told the rally that the statement of support of the academic council had strength in that it was one of the few positive unanimous votes by the faculty. The faculty's "energies have been mobilized for something worthwhile," he said.

The striking workers, he said, have been involved by the Vigil in something in which they cannot be deserted.

Tanford also applauded the faculty concerning the Academic Council's statement, saying that this is the first time the faculty has done anything on its own about administrative matters.

All segments of the University community, he said, must be involved in the decision making process.

DR. WILLIAM VAN ALSTYNE, president of the Duke chapter of the American Association of University Professors explained the purpose of the committee to study labor established by the Academic Council.

He said that at Duke, an arbitrator can't be effective because the question involved is not one of both sides fulfilling their contract requirements, but of the contracts being fair. He said that there had been concern in the Academic Council before the Vigil began last week.

Harmon Smith of the Divinity School read a statement from the school supporting the $1.60 minimum wage, the principle of collective bargaining, and honoring the strike.

BUNNY SMALL read a statement from the Vigil to be sent to Provost R. Taylor Cole expressing concern over the illness of President Douglas Knight and asking that his appointed representative agree to the establishment of collective bargaining for Duke non-academic employees.

Dr. John Strange, primary spokesman for the Vigil, said that the administration had ten days in which to act on the statement. After that period, a reassessment of the Vigil's activities may be necessary.

Reed Kramer reported on the reorganization of the Vigil since it had retired from the quad earlier in the day. He said that Jeff Van Pelt has been appointed organization chairman. Kitchen facilities in the denomination centers have been made available to the Vigil. Dinner will be served there daily in order to continue the boycott of the dining halls. Phyllis Freeman is head of the food committee.

Kramer said that a publicity committee had been set up to inform the campus of the Vigil's activities.

Council wants bargaining

By CAROLYN ARNOLD

A resolution which has been passed by the Academic Council concerning the desirability of collective bargaining was presented to the student vigil assembly last night.

Speaking for the Academic Council, Dr. William Van Alstyne, professor of law, explained that the faculty now accepts the main issue involved in student demands as collective bargaining and stated that it is equally perceived by the faculty to be the major goal.

He told the group of about 2700 students assembled on the quadrangle that the American Association of University Professors at Duke had never, contrary to some public opinion, been opposed to collective bargaining for the non-academic employees.

VAN ALSTYNE said that the AAUP's real concern about collective bargaining had centered on the fact that in arbitration a professional arbitrator can only work to determine whether the negotiated contract is legally met by both parties.

He claimed that the question involved in the Duke situation is one which goes far beyond a professional arbitrator and concluded that the real issue at Duke is whether a contract is fair.

"If the contract is one-sided, the arbitrator has no service to perform except to see that both sides meet their contractual obligations." He further interpreted the student vigil response to mean that through a change in the structure of the University the students wanted bargaining power to be equalized.

IN THE ORIGINAL four demands that were presented by the students to the University administration, there was one that read, "...That President Knight appoint a committee of students, faculty, and workers to study and make recommendations concerning collective bargaining and union recognition at Duke."

In the University's response given by Wright Tisdale, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees, the students were informed that positive action for committee formation would be taken as soon as Dr. Knight is well enough to be released from the hospital and can resume activities as President of Duke University.

Van Alstyne explained that the students, though pleased with the actual promise of committee implementation, were dissatisfied with the question of a time element.

HIS REACTION to the demand was that the University was acting in good faith and that the student vigil should wait several days to see if Knight could indeed return to the duties of his position. Van Alstyne said that he felt reassured that if such was the case, Dr. Knight would begin immediate action about the formation of a group to consider collective bargaining.

If, however, Dr. Knight's illness did preclude his return, then Van Alstyne concluded, there was no reason for the University not to present an answer. According to Article XII of the Duke University bylaws, in the absence of the President the Provost of the University can assume the responsibilities of his position.

Van Alstyne also discussed the possibility that the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees might take action and see that the committee on collective bargaining was formed.

His major point was evident from these two statements: "The by-laws do not provide for an indefinite suspension of power," and he summarized this idea by saying that the Academic Council and the students will not be put off.

EXPLAINING THAT collective bargaining had previously been an issue of importance to the Academic Council, Van Alstyne explained that about a month prior to the student vigil a motion had been introduced concerning the establishment of a faculty committee to explore the concept of collective bargaining for Duke's non-academic employees.

Partly because of the increased student response to the demand of collective bargaining, the Academic Council committee was officially set up.

The committee, chaired by Dr. John Blackburn, Associate Professor of Economics, consists of Dr. Robert E. Whalen, Associate Professor of Medicine; Dr. Irving E. Alexander, Chairman of the Department of Psychology; Dr. Joel Colon, Chairman of the Department of History; and Dr. William Van Alstyne.

The committee was scheduled, according to Van Alstyne, to begin deliberation about collective bargaining today. He made clear the fact that though the committee is a part of Academic Council, it does not have the power to carry out collective bargaining.

INSTEAD THE COMMITTEE anticipates the establishment of a larger representative group of students, administration, workers, as well as faculty.

He explicated the purpose of non-academic employees on the committee by explaining that it was not within the authorization of the prospective group to make them members of the committee. But because the issue of collective bargaining is vitally connected to them, they will assume, Van Alstyne said, a close relationship with the decision and information presented by the committee.

He concluded these remarks by expressing a hope that the students would join with the Academic Council in the effort to begin a study of collective bargaining. He told the assembled vigil that their power was the "power of conscience," and that the danger of the movement moving to the power of brute force was one that should be avoided.

In further explanation of his remarks to the vigil group, Van Alstyne said that it will be the immediate object of the committee to work out a proposal concerning the most effective means of attaining collective bargaining for the non-academic employees. Collective bargaining is inherently concerned, according to his definition, with the "collectivity of employees" which implies a union.

Vigil needed change in tactics as chaos threatened Wednesday

By RICHARD SMURTHWAITE

A News Analysis

It became necessary, on Wednesday night, to destroy the Vigil for Racial Equality in order to save it.

It was apparent to both the leaders and many, if not most, of the demonstrators that the original movement was in danger of misdirection. Jack Eger stood perched on the Page Auditorium stage as hundreds repeatedly jumped to their feet shaking their fists and four fingers and shouting in solidarity, "Four, Four."

To many, the atmosphere resembled the frenzied attitudes that have dominated the political rallies of recent political dictators. To these observers, as well as to the faculty who once stood in admiration of the Vigil's responsible conduct, the uncontrolled and irresponsible outcries of the group were frightening.

THE EVENTS OF THE DAY were testimony to the hints of misdirection. The ranks of the dedicated vigilers were flooded with those seeking a place in the sun, an attitude evident by their opposition to camping in the buildings surrounding the quad, the picnic over. Though the vigilers needed to be together on Thursday morning so that the group

Wright Tisdale, Chairman of the Board of Trustees of Duke University, announced today that Dr. R. Taylor Cole, Provost of the University, has been designated acting chief executive officer of the University in the absence of President Douglas M. Knight.

The announcement came after Dr. William G. Anlyan, Dean of the Duke Medical School, disclosed that Dr. Knight's absence would be extended further. Dr. Anlyan made the following statement today:

PRESIDENT KNIGHT is undergoing diagnostic tests, and we will have to wait the results in the next several days to estimate how long it might be before he is able to resume his duties. Results of preliminary examinations indicate that the period of recovery may be a few weeks."

Under the provisions of the University Bylaws, Dr. Cole, as Provost, is the designated first officer if the president is incapacitated. His duties as Provost make him responsible for all educational aspects of the University.

Dr. Cole is a graduate of the University of Texas and of Harvard University, where he received his Ph.D. Besides his duties as Provost, Dr. Cole is a James B. Duke Professor of Political Science and has served as president of the American Political Science Association.

IN ONE of his first acts as acting chief executive, Dr. Cole issued a statement of commendation for the students who have been engaged in non-violent protest for the past week. His statement is as follows:

"With the end of the 'Silent Vigil' at Duke University I would like to make the following comment:

"This was not just another student demonstration, but was unique among college students in this country today because it was purposeful, peaceful and orderly throughout the six days."

"I would like to publicly commend our students both for their self-discipline and for their high ideals which prompted them to seek more rapid progress toward the attainment of social justice and better wages for our non-academic employees."

"It is both the desire and the ambition of the trustees and administration of Duke University that this institution maintain a true leadership role—that it stand at the forefront in all respects. This means that we shall always strive for the most outstanding academic program we can envision, the best research program, the best medical care, the best buildings and equipment, and the highest salaries and wages we can afford."

"These aims are consistent with, but even broader than, the concerns expressed by our students. We welcome their wholehearted support."

ACCORDING TO Lawrence Whitefield, Director of the Duke University News Service, Dr. Cole did not intend the list in the fourth paragraph to represent any new priority in University policy and planning.

R. Taylor Cole
Temporarily in charge

could be re-organized to pursue its revised tactics, these thrill-seekers laughingly denounced the proposal.

These students, dressed with practicing their eloquence tried the patience of the leaders and those vigilers concerned with seeing the goals of the movement and the tactics redefined and pursued.

By Wednesday afternoon the monitors had evolved into self-appointed spokesmen of the Movement, purty, alienating by their prying accusations many staunch supporters of the goals of the vigil. Finally, in the line of the rise of these obnoxious factors, a change in tactics was needed.

Other factors demanded a revised program to pursue the group's desired ends. Dr. Strange pointed out that the faculty had been convinced the students were sincere in their purposes, but that a continuing quad vigil without significant action might sway some to believe academic delinquents.

ONE OF DR. STRANGE'S PROPOSALS raises a command more difficult to follow than, "Items on the quad!" That proposal calls for students to "carry to the classrooms" the proposals of the march, attempting to convince others of the sincerity and morality of their stand.

The dynamics of the vigil themselves were growing ineffective. After four days the continued solidarity of joining hands was waning. "We Shall Overcome," and listening to the encouragement of the spokesmen grew repetitious and weak, threatening to bury the Vigil beneath meaningless monotony. It is a tribute to the leaders that they saw the evolution of the vigil into a stage for petty personal actions and an increasingly ineffective, mundane gesture and so positively revised the strategies of the demonstration.

ONE OBSERVATION that bore witness to the growing insensitivity of the crowd was their defiance to the fact that they had effected meaningful changes. Either because it feared accepting a fact that might serve to adorn the vigil or because it was caught up in its own misguidedly intense, large segment of the crowd decried the observations like that of Dr. Van Alstyne, that the vigil had won important victories, moving forward the time-table of wage-increases and freeing a channel for discussion of collective bargaining.

However, many vigilers, including the leaders, recognized that after a clear, rational examination of what had been accomplished and what was still left to be won, would a responsible, effective movement be continued. It is to their credit that this is what was done by last night's rally.

Students get a chance to register next week

By GLORIA GUTH

In an interview late yesterday afternoon, Dr. Richard Tufill, University Registrar, indicated that the Vigil has had an unanticipated effect on pre-registration.

The impact of the Vigil is indicated by the fact that at the end of three days with only one scheduled day of pre-registration left, less than fifty per cent of the students had pre-registered. Therefore the deans and the registrar decided to extend pre-registration for an extra day.

Even though the staff intends to register as many as possible straight through without taking even a lunch break, in one day they cannot possibly process all of their students who have not yet pre-registered. Therefore the deans and the registrar have decided to extend the registration day at the end of next week.

There is a complication for those registering at the later day next week. The people who are taking the identification pictures will not be able to be there. Consequently, those students who do register next week will be pre-registered for their course, but they will not receive a course schedule in August when they are normally sent out.

Instead these students will have to return approximately a day and a half early to get their pictures taken at the same time as the freshmen and other new students. At this time, these students will receive a copy of their course schedule.

Trackmen lose first, to U.N.C.; Howser shines in 2-1 start

By RUSTY MCGRADY

The Duke track team is off to an auspicious start this season, with a 2-1 record in dual meets to date, and as expected, the outstanding Duke performer has been hurdler Jeff Howser.

Despite a spectacular four firsts from Jeff Howser the Devils lost to Carolina 71-74. The underdog Blue pulled eleven firsts out of 17 events but it was just a bit short. Robin Bodin and Ed Stenberg both pulled upsets in the javelin and mile respectively. Jim Dearth won the discus. Howser won in both hurdles, 100 yard dash and the 400 relay.

Over spring break the team competed in three meets. The first was the Piedmont News Relay at Greenville, South Carolina. The highlights of this meet for Duke were Ed Stenberg's win in the 2-mile run and Howser's time of 13.7, 13.3, and 13.8 (with wind at his back) in the 120 yard high hurdles. In Florida, the team had two meets in Gainesville, defeating the University of Rochester 65-45 on March 23rd, and the University of Florida 65-45 on March 24th. In the Florida Relays March 30th. In the latter meet, Jeff Howser did a 13.3 in the 120 yard high hurdle, narrowly being edged out by the University of Florida.

The team's next meet was the State-Record Relays at the University of South Carolina. In the meet there were number of fine performances such as Ed Stenberg's 9:08.7 win in the 5-mile, and the 43.2 second 3rd place finish (7 seconds off the school record) by the 440-relay team of Blake, Brinker, Howser, and Carter. And for Duke's Howser, the meet was doubtless one of the high points of his career, for he was named the outstanding performer out of all the boys competing. And this is no small honor since there were 26 teams competing in the relay.

A B & B Rugby teams meet on East at 1:00 Saturday for two games against Ford. Ham, meet Sunday 10:30 in Wade Stadium for Duke Sevens.

by Richmond Flowers (13.7). Nevertheless, Howser's favorable wind, set a Duke record in the event.

On April 4, the team won its second dual meet over North Carolina State 67-67. According to Coach Al Beal, "It was a great team effort, since we were without some of our top performers who had late labors or quizzers." Standouts were Rogers, who won the mile and 2-mile, and Howser, who won both hurdle events in which he competed.

Will Duke's new awakening last, or die in the frost of apathy?

By MAHK

There is an agony at Duke University today, an agony of awakening and decision. A young generation, bewildered by its time and divided in infinite ways, has united, even if only temporarily, in a just cause.

The demands of the Vigil-on-the-Quad are not revolutionary. The people are not radicals. They are mostly the middle class generation, intelligent, usually self-controlled, financially well-to-do. Their methods are peaceful and sensible. They have been moved to action by a great tragedy. Suddenly they have been forced to look at themselves in the face and to assess the world in which they live. What these young saw wasn't pretty and so they decided to do something about it.

What these thousand or so people are asking is really not earth-shattering. They support the efforts of a small local union to get recognition and a living wage for its members. That isn't really that many people involved. Thus, the whole affair could be tossed off as insignificant. But it is not numbers (though even this increases constantly) that are important. The Vigil-on-the-Quad symbolizes an assumption of responsibility.

For the first time in the history of Duke University a large segment of its students have shown a deep concern for something other than themselves. This is not meant to condemn, for the world is too complex to assess the motives and workings of people in terms of right and wrong, condemnation and abolition. The assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., seems to have cleared things up a little bit.

There are many different motives involved. Some participate, because they feel a sense of guilt for the murder of Reverend King and are trying in their small way to ease this feeling. Others treat the affair as a spring festival, a trifle uncomfortable, but fun. A few participate because of public relations. Keeping up with the Joneses or your political opponent is a factor. Others come out to see their girls.

But this is not a lark. There is an agony of decision to join, for those who are serious. School obligations cannot college years all are factors in the decision to not attend classes to give up studying time and sleep in the main quadrangle. Those who do not join cannot be of much use either, for each man has his own method of participation and of self-dedication. The people on the Vigil have chosen this way to show their concern.

The tragedy of the Vigil-on-the-Quad is that it came only after a tragedy. Our society unfortunately operates on a crisis-action basis. It took the assassination of John F. Kennedy to induce Congress to pass his legislative program. His death produced important legislation which might have taken a very long time to get through otherwise. It took Reverend King's marches in the fifties to light the Congressional fire for civil rights. All of these things should have been done years before.

Duke University can be likened to the government of the United States. There is a concerned minority, a concerned leaders who is hemmed in by his situation, and a legislature where the supreme power lies which is unaware of the new concern. This body refuses to be moved and pressured. It is concerned with what the majority thinks, where the money will come from, and wants gradual change to appease these concerns. What they don't realize is that the gradualist approach has built up a backlog of problems which has caused the present frustration and violent action.

Violence is not to be at Duke, the students are too sensible for that, but the powers that be in the University must come to the harsh realization that Duke is no longer a play school concerned only with gifts, hours, fraternity parties, and big weekends. Duke is growing up.

Perhaps it is only a temporary awakening, but the seed is there to be killed only by the frost of indifference and selfishness.

The Vigil will end, but will the awakening?

Duke athletes' image suffering

By MARK WASSERMAN

The image of the athlete on the Duke University campus has once again been called into question this week. The University Athletic Association funds have allegedly been used to pay for painting rings for football players.

Earlier in the year some football players received the unenviable of the Judicial Board for indiscreet actions.

In a conversation with Coach Tom Harty the other day, I tried to get the other side of the story. Coach Harty expressed dismay at the attitude of the Chronicle toward his players. He felt that nothing horrible had ever been said about them. Nothing building up had ever been mentioned. He felt that the Chronicle was not fair.

Tom Carmody resigned as Duke's freshman basketball coach to become head coach at the University of Rhode Island. Carmody had a 32-10 record while at Duke. He was the assistant coach of the Varsity basketball team. He was a coach of the head coaching ranks. Fred Steinbrogge, the University of Connecticut and Bucky Waters to West Virginia.

Coach Carmody's resignation leaves an important vacancy in the Duke basketball program. Steinbrogge was used as a recruiter and was especially effective in the Pennsylvania area.

In response to the argument that the paper doesn't cover the plagiarism cases of the ordinary part of the student body, I can only say that the ordinary student is not in the public eye.

Of course, it is tough to be an athlete at Duke. There is no athletic dorm, no P.E. major, not enough credit courses, and no addition for athletes. The workload is difficult when you have to spend several hours a day at practice. But not everybody is privileged to get a scholarship worth $12,000 dollars.

THE UNIVERSITY doesn't pay for all of the $12,000 dollars. It only writes off tuition. DUAA shoulders the rest. But this does not take athletes out of the realm of the University's responsibility. The athletic teams represent Duke to the general public and the Alumni. Therefore the University must make sure everything is well in this area.

Coach Harty has done much to try to improve the football players' image. There still seems to be much room for improvement.

THE UNIVERSITY is rapidly moving ahead in all phases of its endeavor. It is the newspaper's hope that the Athletic it is the newspaper's hope that the Athletic it will not let itself be left behind.

Everyone was miserable but somehow survived

By SUSAN TAYLOR

Does anybody want two tortoise shell monocles? If so, please contact me. As a bonus I'll throw in two even laundry bags, a soggy bag of Raisin Bran and a worm that took refuge in my monocle's rain between pages 132 and 133 of The Big Money.

As I've learned in the past several days demonstrating can have both its merits and its drawbacks. Being the type who could never sit still, let alone sit-in for any substantial amount of time, I was surprised to look at the calendar today and discover it was April 11. Since I'm about as wide awake at this moment as an afternoon, I'll just give you a few subjective observations on the lighter side of things.

Much has been said about our past accommodations at Dr. Knight's house. I'm sure, however, I must admit that the carpets were not three inches thick, actually the pile came up to the first joint of my index finger, a distance of 1 1/4 inches. The carpeting, I think, was comfortable, though, and we all agreed that as guests of the President we couldn't have asked for anything nicer. Most people settled down around twelve the first night, though a few sicked out under the grand piano as early as 11:20.

HAVING BEEN FORCED to remove my contacts when the first night, though a few sicked out under the grand piano as early as 11:20. I stumbled over several inert forms, and groped my way into a little hall leading to another wing of the house (the house has more wings than a flock of sparrows). Arranging my poncho on the putting green carpet, I gently lowered my tired body and fell fast asleep. I was awakened only twice during the night — once by some irate individual who yelped "Willie cut the lights already" and a second time when Dr. Knight's dog, Sam, stepped on my head. A good friend of mine had a restless sleep on the stairs while some character discarded the bookcase and spent a comfortable night on a stack of old Yachting magazines.

Sunday found us roughing it on the quad along with J.B. Duke. Purely by chance we discovered something that should be part of any Boy Scout's camping gear. The Originally purchased to keep the nocturnal owl from seeping through the blankets, they proved equally valuable as raincoats slipped on like an enormous body stocking, they kept everything from feet to shoulders dry, even if the effect was like a giant cellophane wrapped stalk of celery. The only problem arose during the swaying motions accompanying "We Shall Overcome." The bag would gradually creep downwards to the final verse it would be at about knee level.

ALTHOUGH PEOPLE PROZE at night it was bakes all the way through the day. Hunger umbrellas, from the Duke Country Club or Eastern Airline provided the only shade aside from J.B. Duke's upraised, cigar-holding hand.

On Monday a member of the medical school warned the demonstrators of the possible ill-effects of too much sun, and immediately following his talk, bottles of suntan lotion are circulated throughout the crowd, along with an irascible green liquid that theoretically cut salt loss. Looking deceptively like Lime Kool-Aid, most of it was promptly poured into the grass. One of the truly fun things about sleeping out on the quad was getting up with the dawn. Frankly, I had never seen the sun rise in my life, but having been assured it's a lovely sight,

Midnight on the quad.

You think your eyes were bloodshot?

I stayed up in eager anticipation. All night. Unfortunately I dozed off just as Apollo was about to jump in his chariot, and had it not been for the alarm clock someone was smart enough to bring along, I might have missed it all together.

Well, for the first time in almost a week vigilers will be returning to G-A or Mircourt where they will probably pass out for the next 72 hours. I lie awake tenderly feeling my nose & wondering if Dr. Knight is aware he has gained a pillow and a Pickaway toothbrush. My glasses split in two under the weight of the bottle of Jergens hand lotion I had jammed in my purse, so I can't see much. But aside from these things or maybe because of them it has been an experience. I'm willing to go through it all again.

Fund established for Fuller trial

A Howard Fuller Appeal Fund has been established at Duke. A group of professors is soliciting contributions to pay the costs of an appeal trial which has been scheduled for April 3 in the Superior Court in Durham.

Fuller, a prominent Durham Negro leader and community organizer, was convicted of resisting arrest during a demonstration at Five Points, February 18th. He claims that "there were several inconsistencies in the testimonies of Durham officials involved in this incident," and that "con-

Big. This year even bigger. Some Chevrolet Tri-Levels are longer. Some wider. Some with more cargo room. Size up Impala. Nothing in its field comes as big. For instance, in many others you wouldn't dare try laying a 4 x 8-foot mirror flat in the main cargo level. (Especially if you're superstitious.) In Impala, no problem. The hidden storage compartment on the lower level also takes more of your gear than any of them. The roof rack you order should take care of the rest. For your comfort, there's extra hip and shoulder room.

We make our Tri-Levels lots more attractive in other ways, too. With such exclusives in Chevrolet's field as an ignition warning system. You'll get a buzz out of it if you ever leave your key in the dealer. There are rocker panels that clean themselves with every shower you go through. Inner fenders that protect the outer ones from rust. And hidden windshield wipers on many models. Even with all these advantages, Impala and Chevrolet Concours are the lowest priced luxury wagons in their fields. And if that's what you like to hear, hear this. Unprecedented savings are yours now at your Chevrolet dealer's '68 Savings Expo. See the details below.
