Cards top Devils for NCAA crown

Cardinals stifle Dawkins, dash Duke dream

By DAVE MacMILLAN

DALLAS — Poor shooting, which plagued top-ranked Duke throughout the NCAA tournament, finally caught up with the Blue Devils in the last five minutes of the season.

Louisville, led by freshman center Pervis Ellison, outscored Duke 12-6 over the final 4:08 to win the national championship 72-69 in Reunion Arena, Monday night.

It was a bitter end to a glorious season for one of the best Duke teams ever and the winningest squad in NCAA history at 37-3.

The Cards shut down All-America Johnny Dawkins with defensive adjustments — he scored just two points in the last 15:28 — and watched as other Blue Devils missed shots they usually make. Duke shot 39.3 percent from the floor (11-of-28) in the second half and 40.3 percent for the game.

"The shots just didn't fall. Even layups — they just didn't fall," said senior forward David Henderson. "We got the shots we wanted. I thought we did a pretty good job of executing and we had several opportunities to expand the lead, but Louisville just hung tough."

Leading 63-60 with 4:13 to play, the Blue Devils could not hold off the Cardinals' charge. Ellison, who led all scorers with 25 points, converted a pass from forward Herbert Crook into a layup to slice the lead to 63-62 at the 4:08 mark.

With 3:35 left, Henderson charged for his fourth foul. At the 3:22 mark, Crook made another assist, this time on an ally-op to senior guard Milt Wagner, who gave the Cards their first lead since 17:11 remained in the game.

Dawkins, after being fouled by Jeff Hall, canned two free throws with 3:08 left to give the Blue Devils their final lead at 65-64. Earlier in the half, the Cards had switched to a diamond-and-one defense with a chaser shadowing Dawkins, who finished with 24 points.

"Their defense made it somewhat difficult; they weren't letting Johnny breathe," said Tommy Amaker. "He's our main man, and we need him at all times down the stretch. They played good defense, and there were certain times we couldn't get the ball to him."

Senior forward Billy Thompson gave Louisville the lead for good with an eight-foot shot in the lane with 2:49 left. During the next 2:10, the Blue Devils had three chances to grab the lead again, but Henderson missed from 18 and nine feet away, and Dawkins missed a 12-footer from the left-side.

Tommy Amaker and the rest of the Blue Devils pressured Louisville into 24 turnovers, but it wasn't enough to overcome a sub-par shooting performance.

With 39 seconds remaining, Ellison captured an airball by Hall and layed it in uncontested to give the Cards a 68-65 advantage. Then the roof caved in on the Blue Devils, who somehow had managed to win every other tight game down the stretch this season.

Henderson missed a layup with 28 seconds left and Mark Alarie fouled out on the rebound. Ellison made both free throws for an insurmountable 70-65 lead.

Still, Duke fought to the end. Jay Bilas made a layup to pull the Blue Devils within 70-67 at the 20 second mark. Henderson fouled out two seconds later, but Thompson missed the front end of a one-and-one.

Bilas rebounded, but 12 seconds elapsed before Danny Ferry followed an Amaker miss with a layup. After a timeout, Wagner received the ball inbound, was fouled by Dawkins, and hit two free throws to end the Blue Devils' dream of a first national crown.

Despite the adversity that Duke faced in the last minute, Dawkins still thought the Blue Devils would win. "I felt real good in the last minute about our chances. I didn't feel bad until Milt received the ball on the inbound," Dawkins said. "I knew then there wasn't much time left, and it would take a miraculous shot."

In the last five minutes, Duke shot 2-of-9 from the field. The loss was the first this year for the Blue Devils after they were leading at halftime.

"That's the story of the tournament; for the some reason we missed a lot of easy shots. It's really hard to pinpoint why that happened," Alarie said. "We didn't come through in the clutch tonight."

"I always felt like we would win until I fouled out and I was sitting on the bench. I looked up at the scoreboard and we were down five [70-65] with 48 seconds left. It was very frustrating."

Unlike the Kansas game Saturday, the Blue Devils came out smoking at the outset of the contest. Dawkins scored 11 of his 15 first-half points in the opening 5:46 as Duke raced to a 17-10 lead.

Ellison, the first freshman to be named the tournament's Most Outstanding Player since 1944, had two dunks, a layup and an assist to spark Louisville on a 10-2 run that knotted the game at 33-33 with 2:16 left.

Duke's defense terrorized the Cards into 14 first-half turnovers, yet the Blue Devils led by just three at the break. "I think we could have been up more at the end of the first half," said Amaker, who joined Dawkins, Alarie, Ellison and Thompson on the all-tourney team.

Of the second half's defensive adjustments, Louisville coach Denny Crum said "All year long, when Duke had been in that situation [Dawkins being hounded] other players had been coming through for them."

Despite loss, loser tag can't be stuck to first-class Blue Devils

DALLAS — They were defeated, but they were not losers.

An incredible season came to an unhappy ending Monday night, but in spite of the 72-69 loss to Louisville, the season will go down in the books as Duke's greatest. The narrow setback in the national finals can in no way take the luster from it.

The accomplishments were numerous, and had not their shooting touch deserted the Blue Devils over the season's last nine games, the national crown would have returned to the state of North Carolina for the third time in five years.

"I hope I have many, many more season's like this," said Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski. "To say it was a sensational year may be a little mild. We won the NIT, the [ACC] regular season title, the ACC tournament and set a record for wins. How could it be anything but sensational?"

"I'm disappointed for them because it was the national championship. But it takes nothing away from my deep feelings for the team. I have no problem with the loss."

When Johnny Dawkins hit two free throws to give Duke a 65-64 lead, the Blue Devils were 3:08 seconds away from college basketball's top prize. After missing five makeable shots, Duke trailed 70-65 with just 20 seconds to go. The Devils played hard to the last second, but the deficit was insurmountable.

The only word that can adequately describe how the Blue Devils handled themselves afterward is classy. To a man, the team patiently answered every question the press posed. In the face of insane questions from a few reporters who wanted to know if the loss made the season a failure the players remained composed. There were a few tears and a room full of red eyes, but the Blue Devils held their heads up and faced the inevitable music. For five seniors, it was an unsatisfactory conclusion to a storybook season and a fabulous four years.

"It's been a learning experience. It started when things weren't so well, but we worked hard and came a long way," said senior co-captain David Henderson. "It was a great season. We've got nothing to be ashamed of. We'll always remember this year."

Senior forward Mark Alarie tried to look past the sadness and disappointment of the moment. "We feel very happy to be a part of Duke basketball," he said. "We made a big mark on Duke. In a week or so, hopefully earlier, we can look back and be satisfied with what we've accomplished."

It was a tad ironic that the Blue Devils were done in by poor shooting. All year — actually, for the last four years — critics have demeaned Duke for lacking height in the front court. That was supposed to be the reason the Blue Devils would never challenge for an NCAA title.

Rabid fans suffer along with Devils

By WENDY LANE

DALLAS — When Mark Alarie fouled out with two seconds left to play in Monday night's national championship game against Louisville, Duke's rabid student section fell silent for the first time in almost 40 minutes.

After Louisville's Milt Wagner hit two free throws to put the game out of reach, Duke fans stood paralyzed at their seats. The victory that had seemed within grasp just two minutes earlier now belonged to the Cardinals. Faces looked as grim as those of the 17 police officers who seconds earlier had filed out on the floor to prevent fans from mobbing the court.

No one spoke as Cardinal fans went wild in the adjacent corner of Reunion Arena. "I don't believe it," said Trinity senior Lyndon Jordan. "We had it. I don't understand what happened."

Bob Stoler is a Trinity senior from Louisville but felt Duke's loss keenly. "It was an incredible game. If just a few things would have gone our way you would have seen a different ballgame."

Most fans remained at their seats as the Blue Devils received the runner-up trophy. As the Cardinal band played "Another One Bites the Dust," Blue Devil devotees viewed the loss philosophically. "Duke played a real intense, full game," said John Kernodle, who graduated from Duke as an undergraduate in '67 and from the Law School in '75. "They're a real credit to the school."

Former Duke basketball player Chip Engelland, who graduated in '83 was in the stands for the game. "It was a great season," he said. "Too bad it comes down to just a couple of points. The championship would have been nice. They're a great group of seniors and one of the best teams I've ever seen."

Durham mayor Wilbur "Wib" Gulley viewed Duke's appearance in the final game as a benefit to Durham. "They showed all season long they had the talent and the cool to win every game. They brought a lot of entertainment and fame to Durham, which is nice. They put Durham on the map."

Thousands watch helplessly on giant quad screen

By LAURA ALLEN and
NADINE d'EPREMESNIL

Standing helpless in front of a 25-foot diagonal screen, a crowd of several thousand Blue Devil fans watched helplessly as the final seconds of the NCAA championship game ticked away Monday night.

For a moment after the game ended, the crowd quieted; some wept and others just walked away. Then fireworks erupted over a quad cluttered with empty bottles, cans and stunned students. Champagne, intended to help celebrate victory, flowed anyway as the crowd rallied to celebrate the outstanding season.

"No matter what happened in today's game, we're still the best," said Roxanna Massa, a Trinity sophomore. "They've given us the season of a lifetime."

Monday's giant West Campus bash, expected to last through today, was organized by the University Union, ASDU and the athletic department. Highlights included the large projection television screen, free pizza and three bands.

Fans began staking out territory to watch the game around 3 p.m. Monday. While counting down the hours to game time, they occupied themselves with food, drink and sport.

To rally enthusiasm for the game, the crowd chanted its favorite cheers, "Go to hell Carolina" and "We're going to beat the hell out of you."

In pre-game messages filmed by Cable 13, ASDU president Randall Rainer and other student leaders encouraged the crowd to act responsibly and not to abuse the expensive equipment rented for the occasion.

There was also a long basketball-music video, produced by Cable 13, that was well-received by the spectators. In particular, Johnny Dawkins' now-famous reverse jam in the Navy was shown in a repeated sequence to a cheering audience.

Approximately 44 Duke Public Safety officers patrolled the area with the assistance of about 12 Durham officers. "We could have used more," said one Duke officer. No ar-

Poor shooting hurts classy Devils

In final analysis, Duke lost simply because it could not get the ball to drop. Henderson and Alarie each made over 50 percent of their attempts for the year, but each shot under 40 percent for the six NCAA tournament games. They combined to go nine of 26 in the final. Guard Tommy Amaker also saw his NCAA tournament percentage plummet to under 35 percent with three-of-10 shooting. "For some reason, David and I couldn't score like we had in the regular season," Alarie said. "One factor was better defense by other teams in the tournament. Louisville is no slouch defensively."

Henderson said he believed his shots would fall on each attempt. "They all felt good. I wasn't way off on any of my shots. All of them were very close."

Dawkins converted 10 of 19 field goals en route to a team high of 24 points, but got off only two shots in the last 15:28. The Cardinals defended him with a chaser, leaving the other Blue Devils to pick up the offensive slack.

"They tried to keep a fresh guy on me," said Dawkins. "They rotated guards and tried (Jeff) Hall, (Kevin) Walls and (Milt) Wagner. But that opens up avenues for other players. We had good shots, they didn't fall, and we'll have to live with that."

For the game, Duke was 25 of 62, for 40.3 percent. Other than Dawkins, the Blue Devils were 15-of-43, just under 35 percent. What enabled Duke to head into the last minute with a chance to win was superior pressure man-to-man defense.

The Cardinals made 24 turnovers, including an astounding nine by forward Herbert Crook. Star forward Billy Thompson was limited to eight shots and 13 points, Wagner to six and nine. For the year, Duke forced opponents into an average of over 19 turnovers per game. But Monday night, even unbelievable pressure wasn't enough to save the Blue Devils.

"We forced 24 turnovers, but then again, we shot 40 percent," said senior center Jay Bilas. "How often does that happen?"

"I thought our poor shooting put more pressure on our defense," said Krzyzewski. "I think our defense played well enough to win. I thought 24 turnovers would have done it." Although the 1985-86 Blue Devils now go down in basketball annals as national runners-up, they should always be thought of first and foremost as winners.

It was a season full of magic. The Blue Devils just ran out of tricks.

Mark Alarie wasn't able to take up the offensive slack in the second half when the Cardinals' defense concentrated on Johnny Dawkins.

Duke falls, 72-69

"We knew they hadn't been shooting well in the tournament, so we decided to take a calculated risk. We decided that if they were going to beat us, we weren't going to let it be Dawkins."

Louisville outrebounded Duke 22-10 in the second half after being even in that department at half. "I thought we played extremely well. We played very hard, but we didn't shoot well," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "We got great shots that didn't fall — the same shots that won us all those games, but it was not as good a job of blocking out."

The Blue Devils, although heartbroken, did not lose sight of their accomplishments.

"I don't think this loss tarnishes the great year we've had," Bilas said. "We're disappointed we lost, yet we've done some great things in our years."

"We're not the national champions, but we'll go out holding our heads high. A couple of shots fall down, and we win it."

"It would have been a dream come true," Alarie said. "Hopefully, this group won't lose sight of our accomplishments this year. It's certainly disappointing to get all the way here and lose the game you dream about all your life."

rests were reported, but a few students suffered injuries, he said.

Another officer said that while Duke students were generally well-behaved, public safety had difficulty with local youth. Several dorm windows were broken and unlocked rooms were entered. The extent of damages suffered by University buildings and grounds will not be determined until later this week.

Students expressed mixed reactions about the game's outcome. "The feeling is we are the winningest college team in history, and we're not satisfied. My theory is that if we're not number one, we're number two," said Debbi Dickinson, Trinity freshman.

"I'm very happy. They were great. . . . The coach of Louisville has no taste whatsoever," said Megan Haase, Trinity sophomore.

"First of all we should have won. Second, I thought (Duke) played an awesome game. Billy Packer and Brent Musburger can say whatever they want; they're still number one," said Jeff Heitzen, Trinity freshman.

But other fans expressed disappointment. "It sucks. It's like Christmas Eve without Santa Claus," said Chuck Walker, a Trinity sophomore.

"It's unfortunate. Four years rested on one second," said Glenn Roque-Jackson, a Trinity sophomore.

"We still love the team. They won 37 games and that's more than anyone else. Sure we're a little disappointed. But we can't discredit all the good we've done," said Anne Carson, Trinity senior.

Today the party will continue with a reception for the basketball team at 12:30 p.m. About 20 groups sponsoring kegs on the quad.

Brodie: apartheid dollars delightful

By JUSTIN JEST

President Keith Brodie announced yesterday he plans to invest the entire University endowment in companies with more than 50 percent of their operations in South Africa, giving "apartheid's not so bad" and money invested there says a return "you just can't beat."

Brodie, who waffled on divestment for months, said he hopes the Board of Trustees will put all of Duke's $230 million endowment in companies in South Africa that have not signed the Sullivan Principles, an equal rights employment code he called "economically inefficient."

"I'm delighted to make my decision public at this time," Brodie lied. "What I'm looking for is the best possible return on the University's money. I think this new policy is wonderful."

Brodie's decision, if approved by the board in May, will totally contradict the recommendation of the Social Implications of Duke Investment committee, which wanted to see the University divest.

But Brodie, in the second half of his announcement, said he was disbanding this committee and setting up a new one to replace it, tentatively called the Social Aspects of Managing Black Oppression (SAMBO).

"Let's face it," Brodie fibbed, "the SIDI committee was the pawn of left-wing student groups and the liberal faculty." When reminded that he was once on the faculty, Brodie said, "Yeah, but I'm an M.D. We made bucks, so me and those corporate types think alike."

Under Brodie's plan, SAMBO would monitor the companies Duke invests in to make sure they cut all possible costs. For example, maximum wage rules of 25 cents an hour would be strictly enforced, he said.

Brodie's decision is expected to be a boon for the struggling $200 million Capital Campaign. Joel Fleishman, Capital Campaign director, said he expected the total amount raised, $238.52, to double within the month after companies worldwide hear of Duke's pro-business stance.

"We are gonna play Sun City," Fleishman said. "And, dammit, we're gonna win."

Trustee Fitzgerald Hudson, former SIDI member and new SAMBO chairman, said he was pleased with the committee's decision to work for cooperation with our "anti-commie buddy Pete Botha."

GREG SMELLUS/THE CHRONICLE

President Keith Brodie announced Monday that the Social Implications of Duke Investments committee, pictured here, will be replaced by a more respectable bunch, ensuring a yuppie approach to investment decisions.

"Pete and I go way back," Hudson lied. "I'd give anything for the guy. He's beautiful. In fact, I think I can swing him for the next commencement address." Hudson said SAMBO's decision to support the South African government was based on "pure Krugerrands."

"We have to realize that the so-called plight of the black in South Africa is a myth that divestment would do nothing to solve," Hudson babbled. "Look at Ethiopia. Don't you think they would give up their bloated stomachs to live in the luxurious houses that blacks in South Africa have in their homelands?"

In an apparent flip-flop, former SIDI chairman Walter Dellinger appeared in the meeting in a T-shirt that read, "Divest now." The slogan was crossed out and read, "Divest THIS."

Dellinger, who asked not to be identified, said "I really think you're making a big deal out of the whole thing. What's a little apartheid among friends?"

Admissions head won't be bought

By SHARON MUTTON

Administrators confirmed Monday that contract negotiations this weekend between the University and the recently announced new admissions director fall through after a grueling 40 minute session. Announcement of the surprise move was greeted by admissions workers with shock, sadness and mass resignations.

Richard Steele, former director of admissions at Carleton College in Minnesota, has "agreed to abide by a directive requesting his approval of a document announcing the decision not to submit to the extension of his employment," according to Thomas Langford, vice provost for extramarital affairs. Whether this means he was fired or resigned "will probably never be known," he lied.

"Dick Steele was the greatest man I ever met," mumbled Langford as he leered out of his window at a French major bending over to tie her shoelaces. "And as an admissions director he rivaled St. Peter. But there was just no way he could provide what Duke's admissions office needs and deserves: a puppet who will go that extra mile to accommodate any whim that strikes our fancy."

Administrators have frequently voiced their desire to have an admissions office that selects candidates whose credentials are measured by means other than the usual board scores and grade point averages.

"We want the concert violinist, the bronzed heiress, the adept and agile quarters player," said Provost Phillip Griffiths.

"Of course if the numbers go our way, we don't complain," he sneered, citing the 0.0014 drop in the median verbal SAT score in the candidates interviewed during Steele's 13 day employment as "a major factor in the decision to fire, er, end our association with him."

Although Steele was not due to take office officially until July 1 and never actually stepped inside the admissions office, there were clear indications he would not turn out to be suitable, Griffiths said.

The fascinating private life of University President Keith Brodie began unraveling late last week as federal investigators uncovered millions of dollars in allegedly ill-gotten gains.

What's more, it appears Brodie's rapid rise through the University administration was greased by well-placed bribes, according to an unnamed Allen Building official.

Investigators have already uncovered a fleet of 1978 Pontiac station wagons, a $12 million savings account in Wachovia, Switzerland and more than 1,200 pairs of L.L. Bean loafers in a closet of Brodie's spacious presidential palace, located at 63 Beverly Drive in Durham. And those close to the investigation say that's only the tip of the iceberg.

Shady business dealings, including a stake in the proposed hotel-casino on the University golf course, are among the other charges made against Duke's president, who took office in July of last year.

Apparently Brodie's extravagant lifestyle was a family affair. Imelda Brodie, the president's wife, has a reputation around the city as a free-spending socialite, reported flying regularly to Greensboro and Charlotte on wild spending sprees.

"Last time she was in here she ordered half the menu," said Wendy McDonald, manager of the Broad Street Hardie's in Greensboro. "What's more, she bought a Big Deluxe, fries and a medium Coke for everyone in the joint."

And it's not surprising the Brodie kids - Tyler, Bryson, Bong Bong and the others - were involved, too. Friends of theirs at Durham Academy said Dr. and Mrs. Brodie often let them off at Northgate Mall early Friday and Saturday evenings with thousands of dollars in spending

Concert to benefit former dictators

By LOU E. VILLSUKS
MTV News Service

Noted "aid concert" organizer Bob Geldorf announced plans Monday for an unprecedented "Dictaid" concert in July to benefit deposed dictators and their families who have recently been driven from their homelands by tyrannical populations.

"These subverts o' de population bloody well desuhev a . . . break," said Geldorf, Nobel Piece Prize nominee. "Can ya bloody imagine da uttuh hahdship dat our postuhgal, Imelda Marcos, went through? A whole bloody week of hell before her two yachts of stuff came in."

The concert, to be held on an old tobacco farm donated by Sen. Jesse Helms (R-NC), will primarily seek to aid such recent "victims as the Philippines' Ferdinand Marcos, recently deposed by Playboy centerfold Corrie Aquino, and "Papa Doc" Duvalier, overthrown after Duke divested all holdings in companies doing business in Haiti.

Co-sponsor Idi Amin leaked that the soon-to-be-deposed Col. Moammar Khadafi will perform at the concert, bringing his latest "hit" to "the streets of the U.S." after it bombed when released in the Gulf of Sidra. The song, entitled "We Want the World, We Kill the Children," has been a smash in certain European airports.

Helms was enthusiastic about the Khadafi appearance, despite his "anti-communist" reputation. "When it comes right down to it, Jim Broyhill voted for Tip O'Neill's big-spending budget," he said.

Donations will be taken in land as well as in Swiss bank account numbers, according to the organizing junta.

"We hope to rake in enough land to form our own country," said Richard Nixon, Duke Law graduate and chairman of the California chapter of MADD (Men Against Deposing Dictators). "Since that Chomicle editorial is driving Botha and all of those whites out of South Africa, we'll need a country for them. I can't wait! It will be just teeming with dictators."

Chomicle brings down another tyrant

By CHARLES NELSON MANDELA
Chomicle South Africa Desk

PRETORIA - South African President Peter "Piper" Botha readied his private plane and packed his belongings in preparation to flee the country after an editorial denouncing him appeared in Monday's Chomicle.

The country was in a state of chaos as news of the editorial spread through the major cities. Protestors took to the streets chanting "The Chomicle says your time is up," and "Out, out you go, because the Chomicle says so!"

The editorial read in part, "Botha has for too long attempted to control a country where nobody likes him and he is a total loser," and concluded, "Like former Philippine leader Ferdinand Marcos and former Haitian leader Jean Claude 'Baby Doc' Duvalier, Botha's time is up. Give it up, buddy. Bag it and blow the joint."

Both Marcos and Duvalier were forced out of power by their countrymen shortly after The Chomicle published editorials condemning them.

Officials said that since early Monday, when Botha was told of the editorial, he has been living in constant fear. "He can't eat, can't sleep, just doesn't know what to do. He doesn't know why those nice yuppie students turned on him," said a presidential spokesman between puffs on a cigar.

Botha was said to have gathered his top advisors in the presidential palace Monday afternoon to "prepare for the worst," and offered them large numbers of shoes and black bras if they would remain loyal to him.

Bishop Desmond Tututuyoutoo, black South African leader, was ecstatic about the editorial. "The voice of freedom has spoken," he said. "Shout louder from the hilltops to the sea, 'We are free at last! God bless The Chomicle, they are our saviors!'"

Reached for comment in his plush Flowers Building office, Chomicle editor Way Stead said, "We brought down Marcos and Baby Doc, so Botha was the next logical choice. I don't know who we'll get now - maybe Gorbachev or someone."

Evangelists bid for Chapel control

By GOD L. DOIT

University officials are taking their privatizing plans one step further and accepting bids from outside organizations interested in running the Chapel.

The plan is the brainchild of Joe Pietrantonio, who lost a bid earlier this month to put a McDonald's, Wendy's or a Hardee's in the Boyd-Pisko Cafe.

Pietrantonio will hear proposals from Rev. Sun Myung Moon, Jerry Falwell, Jimmy Swaggart, Rex Humbard and DUFFS and decide sometime between Easter Sunday and Pentecost after meetings with President Keith Brodie, Senior Vice President Eugene McDonald and God.

Although no details of any of the proposals are currently available, Swaggart is reportedly offering to University officials free use of his personal jet, while Humbard is will let special University guest appear on his weekly show in exchange for the opportunity to run the Chapel.

As all sorts of rumors and allegations about possible deals fly, Pietrantonio's office is planning informational sessions in campus dormitories next Sunday morning.

"It's completely consistent with the goals I've set here," said Pietrantonio. "Price competitiveness, employee efficiency, one penny per point and eternal salvation."

When asked if he would require bidders to accept the Duke Card despite the potential sacrilegious consequences, Pietrantonio said "Sacrilege smacrilege. We're talking convenience here. That's about our bread and butter."

Pietrantonio plans to offer indulgences on points and include an additional Miracle Account, a non-food account that is fully refundable upon passage to the "Great Uncle Harry's in the Sky."

"Oh, friend, picture it, you got your evangelist, a television contract, you got your headaches and anxieties cured. Huh? Oh, friend, I wish you could see it. It's gonna make Lee Iacocca wish he'd taken vows."

Pietrantonio also envisions a combination gift shop/yogurt parlor/taco bar for the Chapel along with a possible communion delivery service.

J.C./THE CHOMICLE

The University will collect tithes from stockholders after recent privatization of the Chapel.

Pietrantonio will delay his decision until at least 15 of business auxiliaries' 1,000 surveys are returned. Only one batch, from the Fellowship of Christian Athletes and Ice Cream Lovers, has been returned so far.

GPSC president reveals true identity

By WHIT LESS

Tina Alster Buller, GPSC president, told the group at its bi-weekly meeting Monday that she is The Chomicle's acerbic Monday, Monday columnist TAB and will soon "bury them in print" and make fun of how nerdy they all are.

"I can't stand it anymore," said an exasperated Buller, who sported a smart, trim-fitting suit and looked marvelous at the meeting. "I stand out in this group like a diamond in dog dog, which is what you'll be when I get through with you in The Chomicle."

Her announcement understandably sparked some resentment in the otherwise loyal GPSC. "You're being irrational, Tina," reasoned vice president Mark Swain, her heir apparent.

"You're ugly," retorted Buller. "And I'm not. Don't you think that's funny, you loser?"

Buller's outburst was apparently sparked by frustration in not being able to secure backing for the proposed Tina Alster Buller dome, a 24,000-seat, $10 million arena/meeting place for graduate students. Buller considers the dome "a must" for graduate students and told the Board of Trustees she thought it "a flattering but appropriate honor." The trustees tabled the idea during their donut break.

After that decision, Buller held her middle finger upside down and said to board chairman Neil Williams, "Can you hear this, Neil?" When Williams shook his head, Buller replied "Oh, I'll turn it up then" and stormed out, leaving only the aroma of her chic Obsession perfume wafting throughout the boardroom.

But according to GPSC members, last night's display of unbridled bitchiness was the worst yet.

"She blew up like a Bic lighter and volatile mixture of toluene," said chemistry graduate student Josh Rickel. "I never really liked her before, but now I think I'll put some laxative pills in her lunch milk."

Hotshot professors hired to aid ailing departments

By BILL F. BUCKLEY, Jr.

Three sought-after professors will join the University next fall as the latest step in the provost's policy to cover up holes in mediocre departments with "hot" appointments.

The professors, superstars who have all been expelled from previous posts for publishing too much, are:

- Frederic "Call Me Henry" James, professor of comparative tapestry
- Stanley Fishbreath, English, Law and the Universe professor
- Peter "Tosh" Williams, musician

"We got lucky," said Provost Phillip Griffiths. "All we have to do now is supply them with dressing rooms and a little bell to ring when they want caviar."

According to Norman Bedell, recently been promoted to personal manservant and chauffeur to the three, Fishbreath and James have haggled over who will have a star placed on his door. "Hell, they're just a bunch of sissies. They wouldn't last five minutes down at the Physical Plant," Bedell said.

"James is the most important literary appointment we've ever made at Duke," said James Loosetongue, German department chairman.

"He is NOT, so take it back or I'm quitting," said Fishbreath, who was listening at the door.

Griffiths denied rumors spread by the Allen Building copy boys that James's salary will dry up existing Capital Campaign funds. "They all get fair salaries. I simply take their compound ego quotient and superimpose it onto the fourth root coefficient of my patented double cosine algorithm," he said. "Besides, you couldn't buy a tin of quality caviar with the pittance Joel has raised."

The appointments have not made professors here happy. "Why, this implies that we at Duke are of a second-class variety," said English department chairman George Williams, recently returned from his one-man T.S. Eliot impersonation tour of San Francisco nightclubs. "My accent is more affected than theirs, so where's my star? A raise, perhaps?"

Fishbreath said his spouse's English department appointment this year was a coincidence. "It astounded me. All those years of doing the dishes, and who knew she could write?" Jane Slushbin, Fishbreath's wife, will teach a seminar entitled "Marx and Home Economics" in the fall.

Admissions guru already mourned

"He parted his hair to the left and he tilted his head to a bit when he spoke. The resemblance to [former admissions director] Jean Scott was uncanny," he flipped.

"Although of course that had nothing to do with it," he flopped. "Jean Scott was a saint and we begged her stay," said Griffiths, demonstrating that knack for revisionism that has earned him renown among college administrators throughout the country.

Workers in the admissions office appeared to be devastated by the sudden loss of the man they had come to view as friend, father and source of inspiration.

"I only saw him once, when he stepped out of his car to check the air in one of his tires," said Nancy Austin, assistant director. "But I feel like we spent years together. There's this voice inside that keeps telling me, 'Boy, we could have done some great admitting together.'"

Austin, along with five admissions counselors, resigned Monday in a show of solidarity unheard of since last December, when two associate directors resigned following the departure of Scott.

"We know it's a been a bit overused recently, but we think it's just such a dramatic way to get a point across," said one of the counselors, who said she had not personally met Steele "but heard he was a dream."

Fault not determined

Eugene McDonald, senior vice president, survived this wreck better than his University-owned car, which rolled down a hill and struck a tree. The fault of the accident, which happened because McDonald left the car in neutral without the parking brake on, was not determined.

Durham newspaper wins scribe awards

By Duke News Service

The city edition of the Duke News Service Newsletter, the Durham Morning Sickness, collected three prestigious honors at yesterday's Amateur Press Club awards banquet.

"I've never been more proud of my men and girls," said E.T. "Entertainment Tonight" Rollins, publisher.

In the investigative writing category, the Herald captured second prize for its series on education in the South. Although the writing was actually done by the Affiliated Press, the Herald presented the information with such unusual graphics, such as a plump red apple and a poorly-drawn bull on the front page, that contest judges felt the paper merited praise.

In photography, the newspaper earned honorable mention for an unbelievable shot of a local coed sporting only half of a string bikini. "A Sick Smile for Monday," a full front-page color photograph, reportedly contributed to setting an all-time high in paper sales.

College life beat reporter Diane Riske took home the award for most corrections in one year. Riske has established a reputation among her peers as the most willing to stretch a story the extra mile to make it more interesting for her readers. "Riske is the role model for all our reporters around here," said her editor, Joe Gullable.

Riske, who has been known to refer to Keith Brodie as University sanitation director just for that extra correction box, said, "If those pointy-headed intellectuals can't take a joke or can't deal with their name misspelled then I'll just make up quotes from them, anyway."

Sanford makes last ditch election run

By ROCKY RESIN

Reversing his decision of last fall, President Emeritus Terry Sanford announced Monday that he would seek the Democratic nomination for Durham City Clerk.

"My strong supporters convinced me that I should run," said Sanford. "I haven't won elective office for more than 20 years and I'm overdue for a victory."

Observers say Sanford has name recognition, but will need to build support rapidly before the election Tuesday. "He's qualified and experienced, but he's entering kind of late," said Ole Frosti, professor of political science. "His typing skills are on a par and he knows the city books up and down. His distinguished filing is beyond question."

When asked about his age, Sanford, 67, said it would not make a difference in the race. "I usually don't get upset, so rage will not be a factor," he said.

Sanford had initially declined to run because he wanted to concentrate on his memoirs, and also, the polls showed he would lose. But a recent poll conducted by Margaret Rose and Terry Jr. at Krogers showed Sanford ahead by 15 percentage points.

"I think he's got a good chance, as long as his opponents don't focus on the Xeroxing incident and use it to shape the terms of debate," said David Pellets, also professor of political science.

Sanford reportedly tried in November to use his driver's license to get copies out of the Perkins Library photocopying machines, although signs clearly indicated that ONLY COPY CARDS WILL BE ACCEPTED. "I think he can rise above that and set the pace for a clean campaign," Pellets said.

Asked about connections between his Raleigh law firm and EST, a company seeking to put a waste treatment plant in the Blue Ridge Mountains, Sanford said, "I don't know anything about that. I've heard about this paste treatment controversy, but our firm has always been strictly Elmers. You'd think these candidates could come up with a better issue for debate."

Asked why he supported the Republican proposal for a balanced budget amendment and other conservative causes markedly different from his liberal policies as governor, Sanford said, "Hey it's just one of my hobbies: messing around in politics."

Sanford is challenged by D.M. "Paunch" Loincloth, Fountain Ofyouth and John Tengrams.

Tarheels build Great Wall replica

By LIBERAL BIAS

CHAPEL HILL — After spouting dozens of empty threats, the conservative Students who Ogle Botha (SOBs) began construction of a miniature Great Wall of China today in protest of the UNC divestment movement. The wall is being built around a lovely little group of shantytowns meant only to be a reminder of the nasty racist policies practiced in South Africa.

But UNC Chancellor Christopher Fordham said he won't tolerate such nonsense on campus. "This is the finest institution of higher learning in this here great state of North Carolina," Farmand said. "This University ain't big enough for the both of us. So as far as I am concerned, those Reagan types can just take their tuition dollars to Duke."

The Wall is being made with barbed wire and, when touched, generates about 500 volts of electricity. "Gov. Jim Martin was nice enough to let us borrow some wiring from the state prison and the South African security forces sent over a technical specifications manual," said SOB president K. Klan.

SOB leaders announced this morning that some financial assistance from the Nicaraguan contras for the Great Wall project had been secured.

Meanwhile, the students manning the shanties were busy Monday morning building foxholes and digging tunnels to escape through if the conflict escalated.

"Criminy," said one onlooker, "don't you think that maybe these guys are taking this a little too far?"

Apathy drug abuse epidemic on nation's campuses

By WHO CARES

"It's like finding out you failed three tests, it's seventy-five degrees outside, and taking four valiums at the same time," according to one addict. No one seems to know much about the new drug sweeping the campus and the nation, and no one seems to care.

Scientists warn of near certain deadly side effects, administrators worry about increasing drug use on and off campus, and professors fear falling attendance. But Apathy addicts could care less.

When pressed, users managed to utter a few words on the effects of the white powder, which was first synthesized by several members of Professor Bonk's Chem 11 class. "It's so cool. You don't know what's going on, and you don't give a shit," mumbled one user. When other campus addicts were asked why they were so ignorant and apathetic they responded "Who cares?"

The general effect of Apathy is to deaden all senses and emotions. Most users describe being tired, lazy and not wanting to do much of anything.

Some side effects are a change in taste sensation, heavy drinking, gluttonous eating and a great tan from spending so much time vegging in the gardens. One user said "I really started freaking out when the chocolate started tasting like beer."

Unlike Ecstasy which was rapidly banned by the Drug Enforcement Agency, Apathy has remained legal as sea salt because government officials "really don't care about the legal status of this new drug," according to the head of the DEA. "It might be extremely toxic and it's use might be running rampant, but so what?" he added.

The director of the University's psychopharmacology department says that no research has ever been done to determine the effects and risks of this new drug, and that no future research is being planned because no one really cares much about it.

Dean Suzanne Wasiolek said that she had no comment. She admitted she really didn't care, but she didn't want to upset her superiors so she wouldn't comment further.

Paul Dumas, director of Public Safety, was largely unaware of the growing popularity of Apathy on campus. "I haven't heard anything about it and we have no plans to check for it either. But you know, I love all you guys over at the Chomicle, you are such good buddies of ours here at public safety. You're really my best friends."

MR. HAND/THE CHOMICLE
Users of the drug "Apathy" often have bizarre changes in their vision, with images appearing hazed. Addicted administrators described lunch breaks in the Allen Building with the above image.

Ivies say they don't want to be just another Duke

From staff plagiarism

Brown University soon will combine student IDs and meal points on one card, which also will include a flexible spending account. The card is similar to the world-famous Duke card, although Brown University officials denied the relationship.

"We don't want to be just another Duke," said student affairs coordinator I.M. Apimp. "But with all of these money making opportunities on campus, we just had to try to get a piece of the action."

He said the flexible spending account will be used to purchase a variety of products on campus, including those of a recently discovered ring of student entrepreneurs. "We'll give new meaning to flex it," he said.

Booze banned: In an effort to dispel its "Animal House" image, Dartmouth College recently implemented a new stricter alcohol policy. The policy, which calls for registration of all open parties, no kegs at parties with more than one guest per member of the sponsoring group, no kegs for freshmen and thirty lashes with a wet noodle for bringing alcohol into the dorm, resembles the new Duke alcohol policy, but Dartmouth officials deny taking Duke as a model.

"We don't want to be just another Duke," said vice president for student strife Alkie Rednose. "We just want to heighten the academic atmosphere on campus."

Ivory Towers

around a greek system will be implemented, the Yale Daily Brews reported.

The new social strata will include about 20 fraternities, of which 16 will have housing, and about 14 sororities, which will not have houses. Parties will be centered around kegs, sitting on benches and watching passers-by, strictly non-academic conversation, scoping and the pursuit of a good tan.

One residential college will be left as a token gesture to the ideals of higher education.

Despite the similarities to the social atmosphere at Duke University, officials denied their decision was an attempt to be like Duke.

"We don't want to be just another Duke," said vice-president Stodgy Irvyskin.

Clear picture: Harvard University is still trying to get their television station, Cable 457, working properly. The cable TV network, which broadcasts its schedule, pictures without sound, and sound without pictures to Havvahd and the surrounding community every day, has been plagued with operating difficulties since it began.

Cable 457 head Babs Head-on, who looks like she lugs heavy equipment around every day, attributed transmitting difficulties to cables put in steam rooms. She said the lack of programming was due to a reduction in staff since a recent cocaine scandal.

University officials denied that Cable 457's difficulties were the result of deliberate sabotage in attempt to live up to Harvard's reputation as the "Duke of the North."

"We're not trying to be just another Duke," said Provost Griffith Fitzgibbon. But a recent scandal revealed that University officials had a hand in tilting the transmitter for Harvard's radio station so the broadcast reached only the Boston community, and not campus.

Light it up: Princeton University recently announced plans to build a well-lit chapel on campus.

The chapel will be the centerpiece of campus and will feature neo-gothic architecture as well as an array of lighting systems suitable for the Empire State Building.

University officials deny the plans are an attempt to make up for refusing Buck Duke's money. "We're not trying to be just another Duke," said president Bruce Springsteen. "However, we do acknowledge a precious relationship between the two schools. All of our students vacation on the Jersey Shore."

Compiled by Muffy Ivyrject.

Residential greeks: Yale University will soon be phasing out its residential college program, eliminating 80 years of tradition. A new social atmosphere centered

Death Flight

Medical Center chopper takes the offensive to add more fatalities to its record

By RICHARD WAGNER

The University mercilessly cracked down on apartheid demonstrators last night when the Medical Center's new Death Flight helicopter used rocket and machine gun fire to disperse a midnight vigil crowd that had gathered outside Allen Building demanding total divestment.

"It was like Nam all over again," said co-pilot Derek Bothers of the event, co-sponsored by the University Union, the Major Speakers Committee and the Bassett Fund. "I seen a couple of 'em passin' out leaflets and flowers. I thought I saw one of them with a knife, so we opened fire."

The helicopter, using powerful floodlights to spot its prey, blasted much of West Campus during its two-hour flight of carnage. Death Flight's two-man crew killed 10 members of the Duke South Africa Coalition, returned to Duke Hospital South to refuel and went back to kill 23 more.

While deploring the crew's overzealousness, which caused extensive damage to some of the academic buildings, University officials confirmed that they had called in the air strike.

"I'm delighted," said President Keith Brodie, who praised Vice Chancellor William "Rambo" Anylan's foresightedness in equipping the helicopter with heat-seeking missiles and infra-red night vision capabilities.

"According to my son, Tyler, Bill Anylan's love of medicine is only surpassed by his bloodthirsty penchant for gory war movies, sophisticated weaponry and six packs of stale Black Label brew," Brodie said.

Death Flight's latest success comes in the wake of scores of protests from Engineering students who say the chopper — or "the giant flying dragon of death" — often buzzes them at 6:30 a.m. on their way to the Nello Teer library.

JANE YABADABADINARIO/THE CHRONICLE

Death Flight pilots attempt an early morning strife, over Central Campus to eliminate excess Engineering students.

JANE YABADABADINARIO/THE CHRONICLE

Death Flight anxiously hovers over Main Quad waiting for tensions between unshaven DSAC members to erupt.

"Damn, that's the most fun of all," said Bothers between a hearty chew of Yellow Man. "I love to have a good breakfast, crank up 'Born in the USA' and go out to watch Charlie run like a scared, wounded rabbit."

"I love the smell of MSG in the morning," said flight coordinator and former Blue Thunder technical advisor Eugene McDonald, walking through last night's rubble. "It's like stopping Gramma-Rudman and having a six martini lunch in the same day."

Anylan expects Death Flight, which has the capacity to rush its victims back to Duke North for expensive treatment by pretentious specialists, to be a financial success, boosting the Medical Center's paltry $35 million surplus by $10-20 million.

Medical Center officials had no comment on last night's attack. "Attack, what attack," said Kay Miller, the rarely cordial director of public relations there. "You damn press people are so nosy."

You've got to be kidding

Let's just call bullshit on this academic overcrowding.

Oh, we guess you professors can't fit all those books on your subject that you're constantly referring to throughout the day — double-checking facts, thinking of new approaches to present to your eager students — in the same room as that new computer you don't know how to use.

Those 45 minutes a week of office hours must be sheer, living hell. When you try to help a student with a difficult academic problem, or just have a nice intellectual chat, it must be pain to have to stand in the hall so the student can sit down.

Well, we'll tell you a thing or two. Try living in a closet with two other people who boot off the side of their bed after a night out. Try taking a shower in the winter and scalding your ass when someone flushes the toilet.

And how about all those retired professors who still have office space? Sweet idea. I bet those old folks are really cranking out the publications and research.

Go hang out in the Gothic Bookshop and get tanked on wine and cheese. Make believe you know how to party.

We also know office space has nothing to do with recruiting top faculty. It's all bucks. And with the Capital Campaign now topping the $2 billion mark, there's no reason a good mathematics professor would turn down the customary Ferrari, 5-pound bag of cocaine and personal tanning booth the University offers each tenured Ivy League professor they want to steal.

So quit whining, go out and lie on the quad or try to find a desk in Perkins to work. The University needs top faculty to provide a quality education, but with a basketball team like ours, they'll be begging to come here.

It just doesn't make sense

This is a university, not a basketball camp.

You wouldn't shoot off fire extinguishers and get drunk and burn benches and furniture at home, would you? So what makes you think you can get away with it here?

All through the year, students have been excited because their men's basketball team is the best in the country. Big deal. Lots of schools have good basketball teams. But how would you like to go to Louisville, the University of Kansas, Kentucky, or even the Naval Academy when the basketball season is over? At least at Duke you can ask your professor a question and assume that he or she knows more about the subject than you do. At least at Duke the average SAT scores have four figures in them.

Yet no one pats the department chairmen, professors or the provost on the butt after a good lecture. No one ever goes up to them in the C.I. after weekend and says, "Great paper, give 'em hell in the next New England Journal of Social Economics." This is the sad state of eruditio at a university that supposedly prides itself on academics.

These guys work hard. They rarely get national television coverage, and you can bet they don't go out with the same kind of girls Johnny, Mark, Jay and David attract. But they do deserve your respect.

So now that the season's over, why don't you insensitive louts take a good look at the way you've behaved this year. Wouldn't those 200 hours you spent waiting outside of Cameron have been better spent in Perkins, where you could have advanced yourselves and your feeble minds.

Chanting in Cameron not only makes the entire student body look like it has nothing better to do, but it offends the other team's players and may even affect their level of play, making the contest unfair, something Duke should never be accused of if it wants to attract the best students nationwide.

How can you make such a big deal out of a bunch of pituitary cases trying to throw a ball through a hoop? It just doesn't make any sense.

Letters

Communion on campus

To the editorial board:

Earlier in the academic year one morning last fall I was leaving campus. It was roughly 3:30 a.m., and I embarrassingly happened upon a couple engaging in prayer underneath a street lamp in the grass along Towerview.

For months I have thought about what this represents, and it wasn't until recently that I have become aware of the stark reality of this incident.

I have heard about this elsewhere on campus. But what scares me even more is to hear and think that such things as group worship are perhaps occurring here as well.

It compels me to call others to consider what their actions may mean in situations like this, and how they affect others. Most importantly, though, I believe that all those involved become victims of aggression, stupidity and ignorant pride.

This generation is not too far removed from our grandparents to remember that these sort of things in its not tolerated, and we shouldn't accept them.

Stop all this praying and start mating.

Hey, chaps listen to this

To the editorial board:

Hello chaps. This is not one of my usual letters, where I pontificate on a subject I know nothing about. I'm not going to give you my backyard opinion on South Africa or any other of the world's trouble areas. I'm not going to tell you how repressive the Duke administration is.

Many of you know me by my profuse array of bandanas and pretentious blathering in eight languages, but I would prefer to be seen as just another Euro-fag with a contrived English accent.

Those who call me an elitist are purely ignorant, even though my brother and I had always believed we were named after the conquerors of Persia. Why, just before my letter concerning the naïveté of the average Duke student in South African class struggle, I was browsing through the Encyclopedia Britannica (where I get all my information) and found I was named after a slave.

In passing, I was appalled by The Chomicle's naïve and irresponsible treatment of my fraternity brothers in its coverage of last year's cocaine trial, which assumed they are all convicted felons just because some of them are.

It's just great

To the editorial board:

As a perspective freshman who has been on campus for a total of three long days and nights, I feel I can say with authority what the intellectual environment on campus is like.

It's just great, really.

I am not a liar-murderer

To the editorial board:

I haven't been back to Nicaragua in 12 years and all of your students are calling me a murderer and a liar. Give me a break.

In response to I. Rate Hispanic's March 13 letter, "Calero is a stinking, lying, murdering, scummy pig," and Suzy Sorority's Feb. 29 letter, "Calero has had breath and his nose is too big," I would like to clarify one point. The number of former Sandinista National Guard members who are now leaders of the Union of Contra Freedom Fighters and All-Around Good Guys is not 14 but only 13.

This is a deliberate falsification and distortion of the facts that should be clarified. Furthermore the contras can win without U.S. military support, as I told the responsive crowd in Page Auditorium. The reason we want U.S. aid is so that we can take longer sestas in the afternoon and kill more nuns at night.

All of the students who turned their backs to me and painted their faces should feel lucky that they are able to afford such make-up in this country. In my country we don't have this luxury.

Adolfo Calero

Mind your own business

To the editorial board:

In response to Ted Allen's March 19 "The night before" column, "Jerry Falwell's college is a stupid place to go to school," who does he think he is?

What's wrong with a bunch of people partying with ice cream instead of beer?

Abolish tuition rape NOW

To the editorial board:

The University is pocketing your money and mine in a clever scheme known as the enrollment variance, screw-the-students plan, and we have to do something about it. First, let me say that I want to solve overcrowding — NOW.

The University has many sources of revenue, and the biggest one is called too-ISH-UN. I know how they use tuition to squeeze us for every last cent, but no one else can figure it out, not even the trustees.

The University budgets for 1,000 students and sets tuition accordingly. But everyone knows that there are 6,000 undergraduates on campus. That leaves

5,000 students worth of tuition left over, approximately $50,000,000. The University then takes this $50 million and divides it by the number of top-level administrators (about 50), giving each big wig a cool million and keeping the University artificially competitive.

When this charade is finally exposed, not only will I be blackballed from every business school in the country, but the University hit squad will have my tail in a matter of days. But that will be one less student's tuition to rob.

Steal of the century

President Brodie's fortune allegedly acquired through extortion, finesse

poration that siphoned millions off the struggling Capital Campaign, which remained at a suspiciously low total of under than $300.

The corporation, Ivy Inc., controls University investments in South Africa and T-shirt sales in the bookstore. Griffiths, who was indicted and acquitted in the mysterious assassination of admissions officer Jean "Benigno" Scott, said that the corporation is audited annually by the controller's office.

"I don't know what money you're talking about," Griffiths said, as he left with a crate full of freshly printed blank Duke diplomas reportedly worth more than $17 million on the black market at colleges such as Louisville.

The Brodie empire allegedly stretches from South Carolina to the Vermont ski slopes and includes two amusement parks: Six Flags over Butner and Accident Park in Chapel Hill. The president also apparently owns the lucrative Brodie-Rent-a-Car service and Ski Brodie, which has the most night skiing in the Western Hemisphere.

In a recent report, one former tennis partner also alleges that Brodie cheated at tennis. Brodie used University officials as line judges and promised hefty raises if the calls went his way. "Brodie's side of the court was always plenty smaller than his opponents!" said one Allen Building stalwart.

Brodie, not surprisingly, has remained mum on the subject of his personal finances. When asked how much money he has accumulated since taking over the chancellorship in 1982, he would only say, "It's more than $10 but less than $10 million."

Federal investigators claim the Brodie empire includes two amusement parks, the Brodie-Rent-a-Car service and Ski Brodie, which has the most night skiing in the Western Hemisphere.

ALLAN ADDAMS/THE CHRONICLE

Whatcha got there, Randy?
Randall Rainer, your president, shows off the latest line of ASDU wear.

ASDU grovels to boost popularity

From staff infections

ASDU's public relations committee has come up with a television advertising campaign designed to dispel beliefs held by some that the organization's executive branch lacks dynamism.

Three ads have been shot so far and will be broadcast on Cable 13, with plans for another three if response is positive. The ads depict different ASDU executives as alert and dedicated workers committed to the student interest.

In one spot president Randy Rainer is seen waiting for a sandwich in the CI; suddenly his eyes light up as a possible solution to the long lines at lunchtime comes to mind. He turns and thrusts his way through the students behind him, who give way respectfully. He vaults the turnstile at the door and races down the hall to the phone in the Alumni Lounge. With dry lips and trembling fingers he dials the ASDU number. "Hi. It's Randy. What if . . ."

A similar ad shows Elizabeth Haber, ASDU student services director, on a bus to East Campus. Suddenly a more effective way of rounding up the drunks at off-campus bars occurs to her. Hitting the emergency stop button, she jumps out of the bus and runs into the Canadian Studies house. She grabs the phone from a flustered secretary and calls ASDU. "Hello? It's Elizabeth. Didos! . . . No, I mean, what if . . ."

Advertising coordinator Non Entity said he saw no resemblance between the ASDU ads and ones currently on television for Hewlett-Packard. "Christ, everyone says 'what if, I mean, what the hell?'"

College bowling: Members of Duke's College Bowl team journeyed to Greensboro Monday, where they captured the ACC tournament crown by beating a tough UNC-Chapel Hill team.

Duke defeated Chapel Hill by a score of 322-10, with the latter team managing to answer only one question, "Demonstrate the major effects of inbreeding." Trinity juniors Bill Lipscomb and Carl-Henry Geschwind led the Trivial Devils to victory in the tournament, marred only slightly by the failure of the other six ACC teams to qualify.

The team has enjoyed much success this year, devastating opponents in tournaments throughout the Southeast. "We haf managed to create a winning strategy," barked Geschwind. "Zere vill be no excuse for failure!"

Photo opinion

'If you could be any animal, what would you be?'

I'd be a goat. They're so sensual. Yes, a goat.

Why, I'd be delighted to be a gerbil. My son Tyler often compares me to a gerbil . . . or was it Bryson, or Rothschild? I don't know, I can't tell them apart.

Honestly, I'd have to say a fetal pig. I've cut up so many in Med School that it would only be right to return the favor.

My peers tend to compare me to a raging bull, but I've heard some gutless liberal trustees call me an armadillo. Get off my back.

I'm afraid I'd have to be a jellyfish. That's what Neil always calls me. In fact, everybody does.

I'd be a pig. They're so sensual. A pig, definitely

Packer to become coach of Knicks

By RICHARD VITALIS

DALLAS — Billy Packer, noted college basketball analyst on CBS television, surprised the television world following Monday's NCAA championship telecast, when he announced he had accepted the head coaching job of the N.Y. Knicks for next season. Present Knicks' coach Hubie Brown announced his resignation Monday afternoon.

Packer expressed that he was hesitant at first about accepting the coaching job of the Knicks, who presently have the worst record in the N.B.A. "It was a difficult decision," said Packer, a Wake Forest graduate. "I never really thought about coaching and was surprised when the Knicks approached me. I've never thought of myself much as a coach, sought of like many people don't think of me as much of a basketball analyst."

"I guess Mr. Packer will be a pretty good coach," said injured Knick center Patrick Ewing. "I mean, he can't really do any harm at this point. Maybe the combination of our lack of basketball talent and his lack of basketball knowledge together will combine to make us winners . . . although I doubt it."

From the first starting gun to the final touch of the freestyle relay, the 8,500 screaming fans packed into the steamy Aquatic Center experienced one of the most electrifying college swimming match-ups in the nation.

The Duke men's and women's swim teams splashed past squads from perennial rivals Florida and UCLA this past Friday in a double-dual meet contest.

The victories closed out Duke's regular season competition, with both teams finishing at 14-0. The Blue Devils extended their winning streak to 35 meets, and remain undefeated in the Aquatic Center since 1982.

"I was pretty pleased with the way we swam," said Duke coach Bobby Tombstone. "But I really appreciate the support of our fans. I think they really got the team going."

"I love competing before the home crowd," said senior speedster Chris "Hulk" Horgun. "It gets me psyched when I go to morning workouts and see the fans camping out on Monday, waiting for our weekend meets."

For the Florida and UCLA meets, the Blue Devil faithful began lining up shortly after the swimmers returned from last Sunday's road victory against Alabama. After the traditional celebration in the Aquatic Center parking lot, the fans continued the festivities for five days while maintaining their places in line.

On Friday morning, the line stretched from the entrance of Card Gymnasium, past the West Campus tennis courts and snaked over ½ mile down Towerview Road. Engineering Senior Rod Puptent was at the head of the line.

"Some people think it's crazy to camp out for five days to see a swim meet and wear a lycra swimsuit on your head," said Puptent, who is known among his friends as "Speedo-head." "But to me, I feel no greater joy in life than getting on TV."

NEW YORK — Sports Illustrated, the nation's most popular sports magazine, is under scrutiny by a group of Duke University alumni who learned from a top executive at SI, that the magazine may not run any articles about the Blue Devils in upcoming years.

According to Waldo Snuping, a 1972 Duke graduate and head of the New York based group, a coalition headed by SI senior writer Curry Kirpatrick feels Duke athletics is not news worthy and not what the general public wishes to read.

Kirpatrick is presently trying to convince the SI publishers to only run a short blurb of the Blue Devils' semifinal victory over Kansas in the magazine's "Faces in the Crowd" section, and to mention as little as possible about Duke in the story about the title game.

According to Snuping, SI was planning to not even mention the NCAA championship game in its upcoming issue if Duke had defeated Louisville. Instead the magazine was planning to run a cover story about trout fishing in Idaho.

Kirpatrick, who was dressed in his familiar green plaid suit, was found in New York on Monday and questioned about his reasons behind forming the coalition.

"Ever since my Carolina days I've despised Duke and

Frenzied fans follow swimmers

"There's nothing in the world like ACC swimming," said Shed Stonehenge, who was second in line. "I like watching the meets from the TV side, right at the center of the pool. It's the best spot to yell at the officials and wave to my mom on TV."

Since the Blue Devils gained the number one ranking in both the AP and UPI swimming polls, most home meets this season have received national television coverage. But before the cameras began to roll, the Duke crowd had earned a reputation as being among the nation's most innovative swimming fans.

When Alabama's East German defector took to the blocks last year, the Aquatic Center animals chanted "false start" in German. The creative chaos also reached a peak when Florida's star sprinter was pelted with small dixie-cups after recently serving a suspension for failing a drug test.

But during the Florida contest, the merriment turned to tragedy when a Duke fan was mauled by a baby alligator concealed in his shorts. "I wanted to throw the gator at that idiot sportscaster, Billy Packrat," said the unidentified fan in a high-pitched voice.

Though various TV networks have carried the Blue Devils and their Aquatic Center crazies, NBC swimming commentator Alice McGuire has emerged as an overwhelming favorite among fans.

Before the meet this Friday, McGuire walked out on the pool deck sporting a Sea World hat and carrying a large silver pail. She then proceeded to throw bits of raw fish in to the crowd to "feed the bunch of trained seals," she said.

"I really love covering swimming at Duke," said McGuire. "But you know, I've never seen Chinese people eat in a Chinese restaurant before. Oh yeah, and Dannie Ferriswheel is the most fundamentally sound butterflyer since . . . Dick Groat, yeah, that's the ticket."

Sports Illustrated to no longer cover Duke athletics

everything the university and athletic program stands for said Kirpatrick, a North Carolina graduate. "I got this idea about starting this coalition when I was covering the Duke-Carolina basketball game this year in Cameroon. I was sitting there on press row and that obnoxious crowd was chanting 'Go to hell Carolina.'"

"Right then and there I decided I will do everything in my power to have SI never cover Duke again. You may think its sour grapes since Duke beat my beloved Tar Heels in that game, but I call it revenge."

Snuping immediately formed a group of Duke alumni to oppose the coalition. The group is presently made up of 25 members and has planned to periodically call in bomb threats to the SI offices until the magazine dissolves the coalition.

"Curry has to be stopped, it's that simple," said a fuming Snuping. "The man is insane, and if not controlled, could be the next Hitler or Mussolini. He is a threat to the entire Duke community. Our group will do whatever it takes to stop him."

"When I heard about this coalition, I couldn't believe it," said Skip Bitcherman, another member of Snuping's group and a 1982 Duke graduate. "Sports Illustrated has always been one of my favorite magazines and I can't believe they would even think about doing something like that."

Official a popular game show host

By KURRY CIRKPATRICK

Athletic department officials expressed amazement when it was revealed Monday that their co-worker Johnny Moore was really Pat Sajak, the handsome host of the popular television game show, Wheel of Fortune.

"Unbelievable," said athletic director Tom Butters, who himself is often mistaken for an elderly Opie from the Andy Griffith Show. "I knew Johnny was versatile, but I didn't expect this."

Moore, who earns 20 times more at his Hollywood job that he does working for DUAA, apparently commutes to the West Coast on weekends to film the show, then flies back to spend the week at Duke.

"There's always been something about a game show that's particularly attractive," Moore said in an exclusive interview on his private plane. "But that doesn't mean I don't like working for Duke. Tom Butters treats me like a son."

Moore apparently gave his real identity away to a reporter from Sports Illustrated who was visiting campus to do the magazine's yearly blurb on Duke.

The reporter paid Moore, who doubles as sports services director, for one of Duke's flashy hard-covered basketball programs, when Moore said, "Would you like your change in cash or a gift certificate?"

Moore said he hopes to continue his dual life, mainly because he gets into basketball games for free. He also denied rumors that he's been dating the show's fashionable and multi-talented Vanna White.
