The Residential Life Committee (RLC) proposed last night to redistribute the residents of Cleland dorm and other Few Federation houses. (Photo by Anne Newman)

By Karen Ebert

Duke’s Residential Life Committee (RLC) in its final meeting of the year last night approved a proposal to reallocate and enlarge Few Federation effective Fall 1977.

The plan, which requires compositional changes in four of the seven dorms located in the two Few Quadrangles, would increase female representation in the area from 22 to 45 per cent and would increase federation membership from 274 to 476 by incorporating the “Lost” Quad (Buchanan, Windsor and Warwick) into the federation.

The proposal, drawn up by the ad hoc subcommittee, was approved by the full RLC after responses to questionnaires on the proposal showed approximately 65 per cent approval by present residents of the involved area, student member of the RLC Tom Spencer said in an interview last night.

Approximately 60 per cent of the area residents responded to the questionnaire, Spencer said.

Cleland cuts

The plan calls for reducing Cleland dormitory by half and housing its front section with an independent men’s living group.

The overflow of women would then be placed in the areas presently housing SAE and Windsor.

SAE will move to what is presently Buchanan, which, with Windsor, will be eliminated as independent houses.

Both Cleland and one of the dorms being phased out, Buchanan, voted against the proposal in responding to the questionnaire.

Kate O’Hanlan, president of Cleland, said she opposed the change, although she approved of moving more women into the federation.

In her objections O’Hanlan stressed the closeness experienced by women in the dorm and said this separation would disturb that aspect of the present situation. She also pointed out the disadvantage smaller dorms have in creating social activities.

Molecular tinkertoys and strange potions

Chem student display projects

By Marie Grayson

“A regioselective synthesis of alpha-formyl detones, through isoxazoles” was the title of one of some 25 projects propped up all over the lobby of Gross Chemistry Building last Friday afternoon.

The stifling atmosphere of the organic chemistry test held only a few hours earlier was transformed into the festive air of a craft fair, as students and professors sauntered from display to display. An undercurrent of anticipation of upcoming announcements of acceptances to the excitement.

Poster boards describing a general summary of this year’s chemistry majors’ independent projects were accompanied by molecular tinkertoys, sample potions, and well-rehearsed speeches.

“This is the second year that the chemistry department has decided to have each senior display his work like this,” explained one student, David Wood, as he moved a few beakers aside to take a break from performing his oral explanations to interested spectators.

“We used to have seminars, but there was a lot of falling asleep and this is much more personal,” he said.

Peter Koelsh, whose work on a regioselective synthesis was followed by attempts at the total synthesis of the quachiquipentane longicyle, said it was all worth it, but"pulling 50 hours a week and getting nowhere sometimes can be really frustrating."

Another senior, Jane Schwartzzenberg, displayed a project comparing the cadmium content of pigmented and unpigmented lung tissue, which varies according to the presence of tobacco deposits.

“It seems to be correlated to emphysema, but whether it’s a marker of it, or causes it, is still dent, David Wood, as he moved a few beakers aside to take a break from performing his oral explanations to interested spectators.

“We used to have seminars, but there was a lot of falling asleep and this is much more personal,” he said.

Peter Koelsh, whose work on a regioselective synthesis was followed by attempts at the total synthesis of the quachiquipentane longicyle, said it was all worth it, but"pulling 50 hours a week and getting nowhere sometimes can be really frustrating."

Another senior, Jane Schwartzzenberg, displayed a project comparing the cadmium content of pigmented and unpigmented lung tissue, which varies according to the presence of tobacco deposits.

“It seems to be correlated to emphysema, but whether it’s a marker of it, or causes it, is still
FOR RENT
FOR RENT: House in Hope Valley May-15 August: 600-500
For rent: two-bedroom duplex apt., furnished, window AC, gas heat, no pets; 600-510
Summer sublet: 4 bedroom furnished townhouse, downstairs air-conditioned, spacious living room and dining area, 2 baths, large porch. Available May-August. Rent negotiable. Call 688-2900.

CANOE RENTALS:
Weekday: $5.00, Weekend: $7.50 (Thru 1 June). Oars, paddles, life jackets, first aid kit. Available May-18 June, Sept 1. 2.5 miles from W. Brannon Rd. Call 688-6103.

SPORT PARACHUTE CENTER,
105 Markham Ave. across from Freewateris part of the Duke University Union. Phone: 688-2960. Weekday: $6.00. Weekend: $7.50. Thru 1 June. Olamming, equipment and 1st 3 jumps. $350-375. Maps, River trip information, complete equipment. 12-8 p.m. 3-6 11598 Box 145, Woodmere, N.Y.

FOR SALE:

FOR SALE: Genuine Britsh Mark 8 Spencer swimmer’s star 84 chest. Bought for roommate before I learned he’s allergic to wool. $18 for pair. 694-7094.

FOR SALE: Exxon Gas — Reg. 50.9, Unlimited 52.9. High Test 55.9 1810 West Markham Ave. across from Kenark wash #2 near East Campus.

ANNOUNCEMENTS
Tuesday night is Duke night at Town Hall. FREE ADMISSIONS with Duke I.D. and Student Enrollment Card. Bring your friends to the farewell dinner and final performance of LAGNAPPE TUESDAY April 25th. Great music and it’s for FREE.

WANTED
Dell workers needed at the Delacomtese. Mostly day work. $2.00/hour 469-0447.
Sales rep. to obtain credit card customers for established NC gasoline distributor. High rate of commission. Knowledge of Duke, Dell, and surrounding area is beneficial. Call toll free 600-632-0385.
Wanted: WATERBED. Preferably big and nice with frame and banner. Call Steve 684-7979.
Wanted: Business Manager for Duke Players 1976-77. Work study only. Must have knowledge of production procedures. Hours variable, $2.75 per hour. Call 684-3181 or come by Branson Theatre.

STUDENTS FOR RENT
SUMMER SUBLET: 2 bedrooms, furnished, house available May-18 June, Sept 1. 2.5 miles from W. Brannon Rd. Call 688-6103.

MISSION TO SOUTH AFRICA-SOUTH AMERICA.
Travel discounts equal round trip. Student Air Travel Agency, Inc. 4228 First Ave., Tucker, GA 30084. 604-156-6692.

ATTENDANCE
The students of the Music Department will present a STUDY PERFORMANCE WORKSHOP open to the public without charge on Tuesday at 4:15 p.m. in the Rehearsal Hall of the Mary Duke Biddle Building. You are especially invited to attend.

LUTHERAN STUDENTS AND FACULTY: An informal meeting to discuss the needs and opportunities of original design by Walter Carlson for engagement and wedding bands. Diamon~ Knoxville, Toledo, Springfield.

CAROLISTA
Jewelry Designers
NCNB FIIER (Newbern)
241 Market St., Newbern, N.C. 27560
(919) 379-6600

Sirens of the Cinema Tuesday Night Series Freewateris part of the Duke University Union.

THE BLUE ANGEL with MARLENE DIETRICH
Also with Emil Jannings. Directed by Josef von Sternberg.
Probably Dietrich’s most famous role, as Lola, the beautiful singer in a sleazy nightclub. A respected, middle-aged teacher falls in love with her, marries her, and is finally so degraded that he dies of a broken heart.

7:00 & 9:30
Admission $1.00
Bio-Sci Auditorium
Thursday: Polanski’s CUL-de-Sac
Friday: Tom Jones
Freewateris part of the Duke University Union.

TODAY
All persons interested or sponsoring must be present at 5:00 p.m. in the auditorium of the Chapel Hill, N.C., to be held by the Governor of North Carolina. Please attend an organizational meeting on April 25th in any event. All interested persons are welcome.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.

THEME: APRIL MEETING:
LAST MEETING: Thursday of this year at 4:15 p.m. in room 308 at Living Tower. Please attend as your attendance may be noted in attendance.
Cable TV project's most pressing problem is funds

By Jennifer McGewen and
Susan Millstein

Over the last few months, the Duke community has witnessed a dream for a student-operated cable television channel. From its inception, this channel has been totally a student effort, from planning and fund-raising to actual programming.

Designed last fall by David Frey, the Duke Cable TV Project now has a staff of over thirty trained students. Its executive committee, whose chairman each spends over thirty hours a week on the project, directs its operation.

The project, now in its third week of programming, cablecasts approximately six hours a week to West Campus common rooms and Central Campus Housing.

Ironing out although the project is in operation, there are still many problems remaining.

The most pressing of these problems is funding. As one staff member put it, "The project will be great to work on next semester if we get the funds for more high-quality equipment. It's too frustrating to work with inadequate equipment."

A proposal has been submitted by the executive committee to the Sloan Foundation for $20,000 grant. According to Jake Phelps, director of the University Union, other sources of funding are being explored. "I'm feeling very optimistic about future funding," he said.

The project's immediate goal, aside from daily programming, is to integrate the two presently separate areas so that both campuses can receive cablecasting.

In a recent interview, Tel-Com officials explained that the University's telephone system would be willing to link a video channel to students if convincing evidence of student support for the project exists.

Minimal response

Donald Vandenburg, general administrator of Tel-Com, emphasized that the best way for students to show support is to write to Tel-Com. Letters can include reactions, memories and any other comments.

According to Frey, the response from students so far has been minimal. "I've gotten more favorable reactions from faculty and administrators than students," he said. "But everyone commented, 'It's still too early to gauge student support.'"

Following funding and student support, a third inherent problem of the project is the rate at which video technology is changing. According to Maureen Fahay, a staff member of Duke Media, development is so rapid that equipment presently bought may be obsolete within three years.

When questioned about the significance of these problems, Bob Chatten, a member of the executive committee, said, "These stumbling blocks may be inhibitive but certainly are not prohibitive." Frey cited broadening in understanding of the video channel's possibilities as a convincing evidence of student support for the project.

Affirmative actions needed

Donald Vandenburg, general administrator of Tel-Com, emphasized that the best way for students to show support is to write to Tel-Com. Letters can include reactions, memories and any other comments.

As part of the program, the Clayborne Middleton Project, which is designed to eliminate stereotyping in public schools. Women often have a fear of success,

Energy Research and Development Administra tion announced Monday, it will give "the highest priority" to energy con-

Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

The pamphlet describes the opportuni ties for women in economics and describes several very successful women in economics, according to Al-len Kelly, chairman of that department at Duke.

"At our own expense we distributed 20,000 of these pamphlets last year," Kelly said. The economics department is now selling the pamphlet at cost. Forty to fifty thousand pamphlets have been distributed, according to Kelly.

Economies exceed

The economics department has also been very successful in recruiting female graduate students, according to Kelly.

We expressed interest in women and minorities to about 75 key col-

"Although a majority of the poor are distributed, according to Kelly. "Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

"Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

Women must be made to feel welcome in traditionally male fields, according to Amda Smith, director of the North Carolina Department of Education's Pioneer Project which is designed to eliminate stereotyping in public schools. Women often have a fear of success,

Smith, cited a study done by Metina Horner which contrasted atti-

desults towards men who was first in his medical school class with those toward a woman who was first in her medical school class -

"Roey curates" Participants in the study predicted a roey career for the man, but a less successful and often grim future for the woman. According to Smith.

"Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

The pamphlet describes the opportunities for women in economics and describes several very successful women in economics, according to Al- len Kelly, chairman of that department at Duke.

"At our own expense we distributed 20,000 of these pamphlets last year," Kelly said. The economics department is now selling the pamphlet at cost. Forty to fifty thousand pamphlets have been distributed, according to Kelly.

Economies exceed

The economics department has also been very successful in recruiting female graduate students, according to Kelly.

"We expressed interest in women and minorities to about 75 key col-

"Although a majority of the poor are distributed, according to Kelly. "Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

"Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

Women must be made to feel welcome in traditionally male fields, according to Amda Smith, director of the North Carolina Department of Education's Pioneer Project which is designed to eliminate stereotyping in public schools. Women often have a fear of success,

Smith, cited a study done by Metina Horner which contrasted atti-

desults towards men who was first in his medical school class with those toward a woman who was first in her medical school class -

"Roey curates" Participants in the study predicted a roey career for the man, but a less successful and often grim future for the woman. According to Smith.

"Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

The pamphlet describes the opportunities for women in economics and describes several very successful women in economics, according to Al- len Kelly, chairman of that department at Duke.

"At our own expense we distributed 20,000 of these pamphlets last year," Kelly said. The economics department is now selling the pamphlet at cost. Forty to fifty thousand pamphlets have been distributed, according to Kelly.

Economies exceed

The economics department has also been very successful in recruiting female graduate students, according to Kelly.

"We expressed interest in women and minorities to about 75 key col-

"Although a majority of the poor are distributed, according to Kelly. "Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

"Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

Women must be made to feel welcome in traditionally male fields, according to Amda Smith, director of the North Carolina Department of Education's Pioneer Project which is designed to eliminate stereotyping in public schools. Women often have a fear of success,

Smith, cited a study done by Metina Horner which contrasted atti-

desults towards men who was first in his medical school class with those toward a woman who was first in her medical school class -

"Roey curates" Participants in the study predicted a roey career for the man, but a less successful and often grim future for the woman. According to Smith.

"Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

The pamphlet describes the opportunities for women in economics and describes several very successful women in economics, according to Al- len Kelly, chairman of that department at Duke.

"At our own expense we distributed 20,000 of these pamphlets last year," Kelly said. The economics department is now selling the pamphlet at cost. Forty to fifty thousand pamphlets have been distributed, according to Kelly.

Economies exceed

The economics department has also been very successful in recruiting female graduate students, according to Kelly.

"We expressed interest in women and minorities to about 75 key col-

"Although a majority of the poor are distributed, according to Kelly. "Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

"Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

Women must be made to feel welcome in traditionally male fields, according to Amda Smith, director of the North Carolina Department of Education's Pioneer Project which is designed to eliminate stereotyping in public schools. Women often have a fear of success,

Smith, cited a study done by Metina Horner which contrasted atti-

desults towards men who was first in his medical school class with those toward a woman who was first in her medical school class -

"Roey curates" Participants in the study predicted a roey career for the man, but a less successful and often grim future for the woman. According to Smith.

"Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

The pamphlet describes the opportunities for women in economics and describes several very successful women in economics, according to Al- len Kelly, chairman of that department at Duke.

"At our own expense we distributed 20,000 of these pamphlets last year," Kelly said. The economics department is now selling the pamphlet at cost. Forty to fifty thousand pamphlets have been distributed, according to Kelly.

Economies exceed

The economics department has also been very successful in recruiting female graduate students, according to Kelly.

"We expressed interest in women and minorities to about 75 key col-

"Although a majority of the poor are distributed, according to Kelly. "Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

"Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

Women must be made to feel welcome in traditionally male fields, according to Amda Smith, director of the North Carolina Department of Education's Pioneer Project which is designed to eliminate stereotyping in public schools. Women often have a fear of success,

Smith, cited a study done by Metina Horner which contrasted atti-

desults towards men who was first in his medical school class with those toward a woman who was first in her medical school class -

"Roey curates" Participants in the study predicted a roey career for the man, but a less successful and often grim future for the woman. According to Smith.

"Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

The pamphlet describes the opportunities for women in economics and describes several very successful women in economics, according to Al- len Kelly, chairman of that department at Duke.

"At our own expense we distributed 20,000 of these pamphlets last year," Kelly said. The economics department is now selling the pamphlet at cost. Forty to fifty thousand pamphlets have been distributed, according to Kelly.

Economies exceed

The economics department has also been very successful in recruiting female graduate students, according to Kelly.

"We expressed interest in women and minorities to about 75 key col-

"Although a majority of the poor are distributed, according to Kelly. "Women ask, 'Can I do it?'", Smith said.

Smith cited the economics department's distribution of the pamphlet, Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

"Women in Economics, as an action which encourages women to enter traditionally male careers.

Women must be made to feel welcome in traditionally male fields, according to Amda Smith, director of the North Carolina Department of Education's Pioneer Project which is designed to eliminate stereotyping in public schools. Women often have a fear of success,
Black studies redux

For a University that did not admit blacks until 1963, the election of black students to three important positions within the University could be stretching things a wee bit, label this year "The Year of the Black at Duke." Some change is apparent when the president of the student government, the head cheerleader, and one of the student members of the Board of Trustees are black. Yet, progress has not been made on less visible fronts for the black student at Duke. Black enrollment, presently 9% per cent of the student body, decreased slightly this year.

Next year, the picture doesn’t look much brighter, as black enrollment will probably drop even more. Also this year, the director of black studies and members of the Association of African Students made a major push for the departmentalization of the present Black Studies Program. Their efforts ended with the Undergraduate Faculty Council of the Arts and Sciences (UF-CAS) defeating the departmentalization proposal, substituting a recommendation to incrementally enlarge the number of black studies.

But things aren’t so bleak all over. In response to black students’ demands, University President Terry Sanford proclaimed the creation of his own advisory council at the end of last semester to make recommendations on improving black life at Duke. It seems that they’ve made a goodly number of recommendations.

The more important recommendations of the council aim at increasing both black faculty and black enrollment, the latter through financial aid incentives. Most council members, including students, seem happy with the progress they’ve made this year. The council’s proposals to date are all well and good, but somehow the black studies issue, which was one of the things which got the whole thing started, seems to have been lost in the process. A strong black studies discipline is as important as any other single element in attracting both black faculty members and black students to Duke. Attractive financial aid packages aren’t so attractive if Duke’s competitors can match them dollar for dollar. Acheson’s "no shorts at the black tennis courts" is a major problem. The path is not only scarred over by the rock-filled roads that now cut across the narrow strips of land between the new facilities.

As Eliza might say, we all could do bloody well without it.

---

Black studies redux

If the University could point to a strong and innovative Black Studies Program as an indication of its recognition of the importance of black culture, then it might be able to convince black faculty and students that the Black Experience and the Black Experience aren’t necessarily intractable.

Unfortunately, no one today can point with pride to the Duke Black Studies Program as an innovative model for others to follow. This is not to say that the people within the program are necessarily responsible for its sorry state.

William Turner, its temporary director, must divide his time between guiding the program’s progress toward the establishment of an Office of Black Affairs. Black studies faculty members must direct their attention not only to the program but able to the academic department in which they jointly serve. No one is sure whether their work in black studies will count toward tenure eventually in their "recognized" discipline, so now they must make the mad scramble of a juggling act. None of this mixed activity makes for decisive leadership or development in black studies.

Proposers of departmentalization of black studies saw this as an answer to these problems. A black studies discipline in the program’s department, the Office of Black Affairs, Black studies faculty members could devote their all to building the discipline. A tenured chairperson could effectively coordinate the department’s emergence as one of the best programs of its kind. But UC-FAC didn’t buy that argument and is not likely to accept it for a long time. And the administration, in whose lap black studies now sits, has yet to show strong supportive action.

It seems that compromise moves could be made. It cannot be said that director of black studies were offered immediate tenure, the University could attract the innovator it needs to move the program. That person could then devote the bulk of his or her time to building a discipline instead of being concerned about securing a position in the academic department.

With a little innovative and bold thinking, a Black Studies Program could be developed that we all can be proud of. A committee should be formed to look toward improving the "Duke Experience" for blacks could do a lot for attracting all those black students and faculty members the administration says we are trying to recruit.

---

Snapping back Stone nasties

To the edit council:

Can someone at this university please explain to me why a nasty stone path has been laid down around the new East campus tennis courts? The path not only scars the landscape which has looked more like a moonscape since construction began several months ago it is totally unnecessary.

It’s not as if we East campus residents needed to be officially guided to the A&D — our homing instincts have seen us safely across Flannasy field for years without any help from little engineers.

Nor does it seem likely that our collection of avid tennis buffs might get lost between courts without the rock-filled roads that now carve up the narrow strip of land between the new facilities.

People who wear tennis shoes don’t need the path; people who wear heels have 50 percent more trip-over-the-toe to the store than they did before the path was built; and people who wear no shoes at all are still scarred during their walk on the grass (what little of it is left), because the damn rocks stab our delicate underclothes like steel knives. The path is ridiculous and maddening. As Anna might say, we all could do bloody well without it.

Anne Morris '79

---

Inept bookies

To the edit council:

Over two weeks ago, we, the Taylor Blues Band, were invited to play for the Union Special Events Committee’s weekly “Thursday on the Green.” At that point, we began the preparations necessary to show up on the green, including equipment arrangements, transportation of members of the band from Greensboro and High Point, a selection of new material, and a general allocation of time valuable to us all at this hectic point in the semester. On Friday of the week before, we again contacted the committee and confirmed the schedule that had previously been established. Today we were notified that we were no longer scheduled for the engagement, one day before it was supposed to take place.

In return for our cooperation, we have been confronted with the disorganization of the committee in charge and a general disregard for our time and efforts. What’s the story, Dave?

---

Snapping back Stone nasties

To the edit council:

Last fall the Association of African Students at Duke announced the Black students’ rejection of Mr. William Turner, Dean of Black Affairs, for the position of Acting Director of Black Studies. The stated reason was simple enough: Mr. Turner already possessed one full-time job. Recognizing this fact, out of the question was any secondary additions, etc.

Well, at this time, the student objection can be regarded only as most modest indeed. For in addition to the deanship of Black Affairs, and also the present occupancy as Director of Black Studies, it appears clear Mr. Turner also holds externally a full-time pastorate. In short, three positions are occupied simultaneously. The allusions to the supporter occur in the Chronicle and elsewhere and therefore, disallow any claimer of ignorance on the part of the administration.

Now without generally addressing the question of the qualifications of Turner (who admittedly lacks any faculty appointment though summarily proceeds with teaching) still it is surely the case that certain conditions entail disqualification: pure and simple.

But the existence of such an anomaly at this time on the Duke landscape entails more than the old standing joke on the treatment of Black Studies. Rather, its consequences involve the general and pervasive undermining of the activity of Black faculty and students — past and present — structurally affiliated with the Afro-American enterprise at Duke, their concerns, problems, and achievements.

What is the office of the called what is Duke’s Black Studies Program has now primarily a glorified advisory recruitment function for others: a task requiring the most limited administrative skill, is entirely consistent with its unmasked function, via the administration, which is nothing short of the complete dismantlement of the substance of the Afro-American Studies. Once the latter is fully recognized all events — even anomalous ones — colhere.

Walter W. Burford
Assistant Professor of Religion and Afro-American Studies

---

This content has been generated based on the provided image and text.
Playing for keeps

Self-Inflation and Self-Deceit

Christopher Colford

Not many people ever notice it: the grey stone letters blend almost perfectly into the austere façade of the Great Hall's northeast wall. But there, facing the center of the Main Quad and the Chapel, is a self-righteous a homily as ever was advanced by "the house that Tobacco built". A discerning eye can just make out the letters, about twenty feet up.

A Charitable Man is the True Lover of God.

Below, with the satisfied, incurable smile he has maintained fifty years, stands the principal beneficiary of the self-serving motto — James B. Duke (the statue reads "Industrialist and Philanthropist"), who of course wanted to be remembered as a supremely charitable fellow.

Now despite the best efforts of local historians and University archivists, we know somewhat more about 'Buck Duke than the good side he tried to portray in public. Rapiacous entrepreneur, dishwasher of slavery, calculating opportunist bent on his self-conscious inflation of the sales pitch to attract financial backers, or the anti-war demonstration of about Don't ask me I don't give a damn, my next stop is Vietnam, 5-6-7 open up and the crowd roared in approval; "1-2-3 what are we fighting for?

Washington — Times really do change. Six years ago I soughrn to Washington, D.C. to participate in an anti-war demonstration of about 250,000 at the Capitol. It was April of 1970; I was not yet 13. "4.24/70" is long buried and forgotten in history.

That spring fists were raised in protest of the Nixon Administration's continued involvement in South East Asia. This spring there are but a few stragglers on Capitol hill, and those that are there, are present for vastly different reasons than those who had come to protest, chant, curse and cry more than a half a decade ago.

Often it is difficult not to reminisce about experiences and eras of the past. I am somewhat guilty of that here. Sitting on the Capitol steps in 1976, I could hardly help but think back and notice the immediate differences and the larger changes in America itself. Six Aprils ago we sat shoulder to shoulder on this now empty lawn drinking from a community wine bottle, singing: "1-2-3 what are we fighting for? Don't ask me I don't give a damn, my next stop is Vietnam, 5-6-7 open up those pearly gates. We ain't got time to wonder why, whoopee we're all gonna die."

Bella Abzug raised her hat in defiance and the crowd roared in approval; away some, several students tried to erect a NLF banner but could not get it high enough to be widely seen. Meanwhile, the D.C. police stood by anxiously.

Earlier that afternoon, tens of thousands of young people — blacks, whites, men and women — children, pre-adolescents and many middle aged persons had marched down Pennsylvania Avenue, first to the White House, (But Mr. Nixon was to be at Camp David) and then to the Capitol.

Andist the marchers there were several caricatures of Nixon and other administration officials, which stood out high above all the rest of us. They were to burn.

This was an angry group of Americans who were in Washington that day. The hostility and hatred was blatant. For many the march had therapeutic value, mostly for the therapists and custodians, it is difficult to find any products of this system of sterile conscience who are either "charitable" or "true lovers of God".

Peace and quiet in D.C.

Steve Petrow

WASHINGTON — Times really do change. Six years ago I soughrn to Washington, D.C. to participate in an anti-war demonstration of about 250,000 at the Capitol. It was April of 1970; I was not yet 13. "4.24/70" is long buried and forgotten in history.

That spring fists were raised in protest of the Nixon Administration's continued involvement in South East Asia. This spring there are but a few stragglers on Capitol hill, and those that are there, are present for vastly different reasons than those who had come to protest, chant, curse and cry more than a half a decade ago.

Often it is difficult not to reminisce about experiences and eras of the past. I am somewhat guilty of that here. Sitting on the Capitol steps in 1976, I could hardly help but think back and notice the immediate differences and the larger changes in America itself. Six Aprils ago we sat shoulder to shoulder on this now empty lawn drinking from a community wine bottle, singing: "1-2-3 what are we fighting for? Don't ask me I don't give a damn, my next stop is Vietnam, 5-6-7 open up those pearly gates. We ain't got time to wonder why, whoopee we're all gonna die."

Bella Abzug raised her hat in defiance and the crowd roared in approval; away some, several students tried to erect a NLF banner but could not get it high enough to be widely seen. Meanwhile, the D.C. police stood by anxiously.

Earlier that afternoon, tens of thousands of young people — blacks, whites, men and women — children, pre-adolescents and many middle aged persons had marched down Pennsylvania Avenue, first to the White House, (But Mr. Nixon was to be at Camp David) and then to the Capitol.

Andist the marchers there were several caricatures of Nixon and other administration officials, which stood out high above all the rest of us. They were to burn.

This was an angry group of Americans who were in Washington that day. The hostility and hatred was blatant. For many the march had therapeutic value, mostly for the therapists and custodians, it is difficult to find any products of this system of sterile conscience who are either "charitable" or "true lovers of God".

Somewhere between sunset and sunrise the Monday night matricracy valiantly put forth its last effort. Thanks to Larry Topman, stand-by paste-up. Special appreciation for this semester: Anne "the chief" and Jeannie A.ME. Law gspg night editor: Amy Levinson.
has 400 men competing in intercollegiate athletics, and 127 full scholarships are awarded among 156 men. The football and basketball teams (Duke's two revenue sports) account for 97 and 15 full scholarships respectively.

According to the same fact sheet, 115 women compete in athletics, and of those, 127 full scholarships are awarded among 156 men. The number of scholarships awarded to women is 400 and for men is 373. The ratio of scholarships awarded to men and women is 400 men to 127 women.

The chairwoman of the committee, Dean Virginia Bryan, could not reach last night for comment. The penalty for noncompliance with the law is the possible forfeiture of Federal funds to the University, which currently receives a total of $37 million in Federal monies.
There is an old journalism adage that states, "Old news is no news." Well to that I reply, "No news is good news." It was only a week ago Sunday, on April 11, that saw Duke University bear witness to a strange phenomenon. . . . Wallace Wade Stadium, until then a cement pit used only for football games and track meets, transcended all modern day technologies and transformed itself into an ancient resemblance of the Roman Coliseum. The scene was definitely surreal, as men in togas, with beer in hand, marched around the arena preparing to do battle, as lesser men and women alike took refuge in the stands to observe the fate of hundreds.

After the opening ceremonies came to a climax (in other words, after the six-packs were finished), it was time to start the competition. The softball throw was held first and two inhuman throws were displayed. One was a 104 yard toss by a Sig Ep, the other was a 108 yard heave by an ATO (Remember them, they used to be called Sigs and the Delta Sigs). A Token Phi Kapp was third with a respectable throw of 86 yards.

An 8-man mile Relay Race might have been the most exciting event of the day. In the first heat, Omega Psi Phi jumped out to an early lead, only to be passed up by the Kappa Sigs and the Delta Sigs. The Kappa Sigs won that heat in 3:18.8. In the second heat, the ATO's were leading, but dropped their baton on the second exchange. But an alert ATO ran on to the infield, picked up the baton, and resumed his pace, despite being passed up by the entire field. With their "never say die" attitude, plus some help from their speed boys, the Taus regained the lead and won with a surprising 3:15.3. But the Sig Eps were yet to run, and in the very next heat, won the race with a time of 3:14.1. The Pikas also showed some stamina, as there 3:18.8 time tied the Kappa Sigs for third place.

A glamour event, the 100 yard dash, was the next contested event. As expected, a member of Omega Psi Phi saw fit to run the length of the football field in a blistering 16.3 seconds. An ATO was close behind in 10.35, and a Delt was third, running a 10.5. It must be remembered that Greek men are never too far away from beautiful women. And so it was on this given Sunday, that fraternity Little Sisters were allowed to compete with the sundry Adonises. A Three-Legged Race was held, and the Delta Sigs emerged victorious. Kappa Sigma and their beauties were second, and the ATO's were again present with a third place finish.

There was also a Little Sister Carry Relay Race. A little sister acted as a pseudo-baton, while six frat men took turns carrying her up and down the football field. Although the Taus from Alpha Tau Omegas came from behind to win, and the Pikas and Delta finished second and third, respectively, they were some mighty big losers...namely the little sisters who had to be transported up and down the field. They complained that the ride was hazardous to their health at best.

Beer served as gold medals at the Greek games. A buzzing was running un molested amongst the estimated crowd of 36,000. . . . At the Greek Games, the incomparable Chugging Contest. Before the start of the event, the incomparable Chugging Contest. Before the start of the event, there was a buzz amongst the entire crowd, as the ATO's were predicted to be close, as the Delta Sigs recruited more beer to strengthen their losses from graduation. But, in a surprise effort, the ATO's won quite handily. Following up in a third place finish were the brothers of Phi Kappa Sigma.

A buzzing was running un molested amongst the estimated crowd of 36,000. . . . At the Greek Games, the incomparable Chugging Contest. Before the start of the event, there was a buzz amongst the entire crowd, as the ATO's were predicted to be close, as the Delta Sigs recruited more beer to strengthen their losses from graduation. But, in a surprise effort, the ATO's won quite handily. Following up in a third place finish were the brothers of Phi Kappa Sigma.
By Mike Stanford

Along Came the Witch: A Journal in the 1960's is Helen Bevington's memoir of a decade of travel and teaching at Duke, and its contents are delightfully varied. Besides some of the best of Mrs. Bevington's light verse, it includes a resonant and deeply moving narrative about the ideal father whose absence haunted her childhood. There is a skeptical look at the student movements of the sixties: "What conformity is required of rebels?" cries Mrs. Bevington (who has seen it all before, in the Greenwich Village of the twenties).

The account of a trip through Europe embodies the sort of fresh, unjaded, wide-eyed travel writing that is nearly extinct these days. But the author's own true country, of which she never leaves, is literature, and much of the book consists of passages from favorite writers with Mrs. Bevington's own comments in praise or complaint.

The prose throughout is doggedly clear and uncluttered, the tone a highly personal one of blunt cheerful writers with Mrs. Bevington's own comments in praise or complaint. Much of the book consists of passages from favorite writers with Mrs. Bevington's own comments in praise or complaint.

-Black affairs-

(Continued from page 1)

number of black students," said William Turner, a member of the council, director of black studies and dean of black affairs. "Our hiring of black faculty has been difficult, as we need more aggressive recruitment and greater availability of black candidates to insure qualified personnel," he added. The council has also worked on the staffing of the Black Studies Program, with two faculty positions offered for next year.

Turner is now working with the relevant departments and has several potential candidates for the openings. Increase enrollment At a meeting this Saturday, the council made recommendations aimed at increasing black enrollment and financial aid. "We are hoping for a 20 per cent increase in black enrollment in ten years," Turner said. Additional housing Applications until midnight 9 p.m. Admission $1.

Who Said Joe College Died?

"The Taste's The Same Only The Name's Been Changed"
The Duke University Union Brings You

A Celebration of Spring

....Wednesday, Daniel Schorr on the Quad 12:30 p.m.
....Wednesday, "The Robber Bridegroom", Page 8:00 p.m.
....Thursday, Student Art Show, Chapel Quad
....Thursday, Thursday on The Green
....Friday, Crafts Fair 10:00 a.m. until 5:00 p.m.
...including:

A Day at the Races (see rules and entry blank below)
A Beer Garden
Music
AND AT NIGHT
Music from 5:00 p.m. until 11:00 p.m. FEATURING...
RED HERRING
RED CLAY RAMBLERS
AND SOUTHWING

Who Said Joe College Died?

"The Taste's The Same Only The Name's Been Changed"
The Duke University Union Brings You

A Celebration of Spring

Rules for a day at the races:

1. Beer chugging contest
2. Pass the orange content (neck to neck)
3. Wheelbarrow race
4. Watermelon eating contest
5. Mother Nature Look-alike costume contest
6. Limbo contest

open to all duke students

Entry Fee $5.00
Grand Prize - 1 Keg of Beer
Take application to 207 flowers before noon Wednesday

The Chronicle
Tuesday, April 20, 1976