The Voting Age

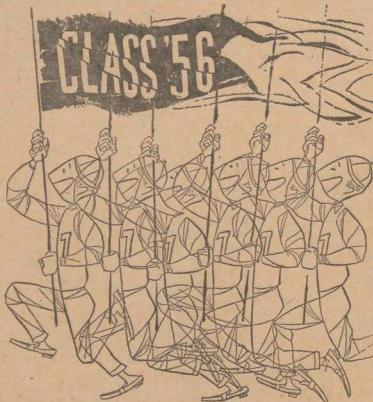

Ever since World War II there has been much agitation in this country to reduce the voting age to 18. President Eisenhower requested such a move in his State of the Union address before Congress just last January. To our way of thinking, the 18-year-old should be given the right to vote.

First of all, we agree with the argument that a man who is old enough to die in the defense of his country should also have the voting privilege. We do not contend that all 18-year-olds will be ideal voters, anymore than we would try to say all those presently eligible to cast ballots are perfect voters. But we believe a man who is old enough to fight for his country should have some say in selecting the leaders of his nation.

Furthermore, once the 18-year-old is given the right to vote, it would practically become the duty of our secondary schools to teach the young people the procedures of casting a ballot. More would be done to show the young person the proper way to evaluate both candidates and issues. Indeed, such education would be a good thing; once the voting interest is instilled in American youth they are not likely to forget their responsibilities as citizens in later years, as their parents so often do.

We do not feel that young people, as a general rule, will permit parental influence to dictate their voting habits. But where parents' ideas do enter in, why should we fear such influence? In nearly every other aspect of the young person's development this influence is encouraged. We doubt that what sway the parents have will be so damaging here.

The simple fact is that we have faith in the young people of this country. They have been able to pass every test this nation has imposed them. We are certain that if the voting age is lowered to 18 the youth of America will justify the trust placed in them.

'Security' Armament Remains Big Question In United Nations and Congressional Circles

By MIKI SOUTHERN

Senior Staff Reporter

(This is the third in a series of articles reporting on the Citizenship Seminar held recently in New York City and Washington. The names of three men paraphrased below are withheld upon request.)

Armament for "security" still remains a big question in U. N. headquarters in New York and on Capitol Hill in Washington with Congressmen and delegates offering only close-lipped comments on the subject.

According to a Tokyo professor, now in New York, the Japanese people, reconverted into peace-lovers by U. S. propaganda, do not want to be re-armed; in fact, he warned, they may "turn against those who re-arm them."

In Pakistan, however, military aid is most welcome, an official from that country's delegation stated firmly. Protesting that technical aid to India merely freed more money from the Indian national budget to go into arms, the delegate asserted that he could see no real difference between supplying military or technical assistance to another country.

Defending India's request for more technical aid from the U. S., a spokesman for that country declared that fighting communism "with military (forces) is a false concept . . . re-arming Pakistan is only strengthening Moslem nationalists. . . ."

"Security above all" was the cry from Washington of Speaker of the House Joseph Martin. This plea was backed by Representative Jacob Javits of New York, a member of the House Foreign

Blue Devils Engage Virginia Thursday Night In First Round of Conference Tournament

In the second game of a first-round doubleheader in Raleigh Thursday night, the Duke Blue Devils will play the University of Virginia's eighth-seeded Cavaliers.

Coach Harold Bradley's team already holds an 86-64 win over the Virginians, and they are heavily favored to win Thursday's game and move into the semi-finals Friday against the winner of the State-Carolina clash.

In their last conference game, the Devils had little trouble disposing of the Wake Forest Demon Deacons, 90-81 last Friday.

The game was nip-and-tuck during the first half with the Dukes holding a slim 41-40 half-time advantage. Exploding for 30 points in the third period, the Dukes went on to capture their ninth conference win against a single defeat.

High-scoring honors went to Wake Forest's All-American, Dick Henric, who burned the cords for 28 points. Sophomores Ronnie Mayer and Joe Belmont led the winners, each with 18.

Saturday the Dick-Groat-led Fort Belvoir Engineers won a 84-75 decision from the Duke "service" team. The game was played before 7,500 fans with all proceeds going to the "March of Dimes" drive.

Duke's only two-sport All-American Dick Groat took individual scoring honors for the game with 23 points.

Duke Gym Team Loses Fifth Straight Contest

Coach Ray Sorenson's Blue Devil gymnastics team went down to its fifth straight defeat here Saturday, as the University of North Carolina tumblers swept all six first places while capturing a 71-24 victory.

Gordon Hudson was the scoring star for the visitors, winning two firsts and two seconds for 18 points. Bill Murray led the Duke team with six points.

Next Saturday afternoon and night, the Southern Intercollegiate Gymnastics league will hold its championships in the Duke gymnasium. The league is composed of all schools with gymnastics teams from Maryland to Florida, and many strong entries are expected.

Duke Third In Indoor Games

Duke's Joel Shankle captured individual honors in the first annual ACC Indoor Games, but the Blue Devil team could do no better than third place behind the potent Maryland Terrapins and the host Carolina entry.

Maryland amassed a total of 55 3/4 points in winning the team title, while UNC took runner-up honors with 33 3/4 points. The Blue Devils scored 32 points.

Shankle took three firsts, a tie for first, and a second for 22 points. His firsts came in the broad jump, the low hurdles and the high hurdles. He tied for the top spot in the high jump and was second in the pole vault.

Durham Lawshe, another Blue Devil, set a new conference standard in the shot put with a heave of 51'-3 3/4", to better the old record set by Maryland's Jack Unterkoller.
