Today we come to the end of three years of work with

Hate the day—the question of America's participation in a world of power and war. The editorial page of the newspaper rang with the terms of the day—"foolationism", "interventionism", "America First."

Later, after that problem was solved—not by words
but by the actions of Japanese planes over the Hawaiian lalads one December day—the problems of the CHRONTEL
Later, after that problem whole, the newsper gropeed in the dark for an answer to the unexpected change of the control of the staff of the conversion of the University from a peacetime institution

Strange Carolina Week

Strange Carolina Week

It's been a strange Duke-Carolina week.

Gone, and justifiably so, are all-night vigils around Wash Duke's statue, raids on the Carolina campus for Rameses, alwave heads, massive bonfires.

They belong to a gay, carefree Duke—a Duke which we know no more. They have no place in the Duke of today, in a university which has a wartime job to do.

But those dardevil caravans of invaders which once engaged in pitched battles from Durham to Chapel Hill
—and offen campus at peace or at war—spirit.

This year we don't mind foregoing the pleasure of scaping a Tar Heel with a paint bucket in the vicinity of the campus. We have to give up a lot of our old privtulges nowadays. But we will make an unjustifiable wartime sacrifice if we let the old heated but respectful aimnosity toward all things Ter Heelind du out. That's the essence of Duke aprirt.

The game tomorrow will not have the color of the old ones. Most of the transfer players—and the transfer student body as well—regger of Carolina as just another team. But as long as there is a vertige of the old well as the property of the color of the old ones. Most of the transfer players—and the transother team. But as long as there is a vertige of the old well as the property of the old ones. The sum of the players—and the transother team. But as long as there is a vertige of the old well as the players.

Let Med the players are the players—and the transother team. But as long as there is a vertige of the old
well as the players.

Food Conservation—At the Source—

FOOD LORISETYALION—At the SOURCE—Students waste vast amounts of food in the union daily—enough in fact, to feed the university's entire maintenance staff three times at any. Plates are left piled high with nibbled-at and untouched food.

Food costs are at a record high—the union can buy less for its money now than at any time in university history, and "seconds" are now impossible. All wasted food is pure financial loss to the university—a loss which, if eliminated, might enable the purchase of larger amounts of food, and of a type which might be less inable to become the but of complains. "Seconds" and of a complains. "Seconds" and of a complains is second and a food conservation program in the Union Dining Halls would have an even more practical benefit for the student body than the mere satisfaction of complying with the government's "clean-your-plate" empaigns.—C.B.M.

During the years to come, the newspaper will have further jobs to do. Until peace comes, it must continue to do its small part in bringing the war home to its readers. After the war, it must face the problems of re-habilitation of returning student-servicemen, of the expected loosening of morale and morals that follows any great war, of the transition back to the peacetime University.

We have been glad to play our own small part in the great story of these troublous times, telling what portions of it we saw to our limited audience. We are thankful that the CHRONICLE, throughout these years, has proved itself to be greater than any personality. Its defenders and critics, its editors and staff, may come and go. Somehow the newspaper—and righty so—has proved greater than the men who have made up its organization.

besides an institution, that makes us sure of the future of the newspaper. Our work has been worthwhile because we are taking part of it away with us as part of our own personality. We leave with a feeting of satisfaction that we were only one of many.

Tradition

Tomorrow Duke will meet its traditional rivals, the Tar Heels from the University of North Carbina. The rivaly between these two schools is probably one of the hottest in the South. In pre-war days neither school was very active academically for the week preceding the game. While the camputes higwigs of the two colleges were getting togother having banquets and meetings, professing their love for one another, the rest of the student hodie of the two schools were assailing each other violently.

Already this year the Tar Heel students, or Heels as hey are more popularly known, have started beating he ward rums by a recent invasion in which the under-ass on East Campus received a liberal dose of paint. In the past, for days before the gridlerion battle, the male tudents of both institutions were at each other's throats out and nail. Yigilant guards were posted around the tatue of Washington Duke, armed with fire hoses, spike to boards, and any other manner of weapons that were analy, ready to stave off any invading Heels, Similar studiest guarded rused in Chapel Hill where Carolina tudents guarded rused in Chapel Hill where Carolina tudents guarded rused in Chapel Hill where Carolina tudents guarded to the Morehead-Paterson Bell tower.
