THE CROW'S NEST

MAD DOGS...and Englishmen... What is it about those that are mad that makes them go about in packs? Three former "mad dogs" from Duke University have been known to congregate regularly at The Chronicle, causing much consternation among those who work there. It is believed that these dogs, during their time at Duke, may have developed a pack mentality that has carried over into their current group. The dogs, who are known to be quite vocal and aggressive, have been known to bark at anyone who gets too close to their den. It is recommended that anyone who encounters these dogs keep their distance and avoid making eye contact. The dogs are known to respond well to treats, so if you must approach them, it is suggested that you bring along some food as a peace offering. The dogs are also known to be quite loyal to each other, and will only engage in friendly play-fighting. It is not recommended to try and separate them, as this could lead to serious injury for both the dogs and any humans involved. It is suggested that any interaction with these dogs be kept to a minimum, and that they be left to their own devices. The dogs are quite intelligent and will adapt readily to their new environment. COLLEGE TRAINING IS DECLARED ADEQUATE

THIELEN MAKES STRONG DEFENSE OF TRAINING IN INSTITUTIONS.

In a letter to The Duke Sunday, May 2nd, 1932, the late Dr. J. E. Thielean, the late president of the University of North Carolina, expressed his belief that the training of college men should be declared adequate by the American Council of Education. Dr. Thielean's statement was the result of a series of discussions with the American Council of Education, held at the University of North Carolina, in which he expressed his belief that the training of college men should be declared adequate by the American Council of Education.

during the war, the number of students enrolled in the University of North Carolina was more than doubled.

each case results in a complete break in the education of the student.

Serving on the University of North Carolina, the American Council of Education has been, for the past nine years, the American Council of Education.

SPRITUALS ARE SUNG BY HIWAITHA QUARTET

Dear Fairbanks, March 11, 1986

The Wednesday morning meeting of the Baccalaureate Society, held at the offices of Fairbanks, is called to order at 10:00 a.m. by the President, Robert W. Fairbanks. The minutes of the previous meeting are read and approved. The President presents the following report:

The Baccalaureate Society has continued to flourish under the energetic leadership of its officers. The society has been very active in recent months, participating in various campus events and organizing successful events of its own. The society has also continued to sponsor the annual Baccalaureate Day, which is eagerly anticipated by the students.

The society has also been involved in community service projects. In recent weeks, members of the society have volunteered at the local soup kitchen and participated in a clean-up drive of the downtown area. These activities have helped to foster a sense of community involvement among the students.

The society has also continued to support its scholarship fund. Members of the society have contributed generously to the fund, and the society has been able to award several scholarships to deserving students.

The society has also continued to hold regular meetings, which are open to all students. The next meeting will be held on March 25, at 10:00 a.m. in the student center.

Respectfully,
Robert W. Fairbanks
President, Baccalaureate Society

SING HUMOR IN DUKE EXPANSION

World Reporter: Face That Bids Duke Expansion

An Upstart

By Norman C. Melvin

The world has been watching the Duke expansion with interest. Duke is a major player in the national expansion of higher education, and its success or failure will have a profound impact on the future of the university.

Duke has been particularly aggressive in its expansion efforts. The university has been attracting a large number of new students and faculty, and has been expanding its facilities and programs accordingly. The university has also been successful in raising significant amounts of money to support its expansion efforts.

The expansion has been controversial, however, with some people questioning whether Duke has the financial resources to support such a large expansion.

Duke has responded to these concerns by emphasizing its commitment to financial prudence. The university has made a number of strategic decisions to ensure financial stability, including the creation of a new financial planning department and the establishment of a new financial aid program.

The university has also made significant investments in its faculty and staff, which will be critical to its future success.

In conclusion, Duke's expansion is a major development in the world of higher education. The university's success or failure will have far-reaching implications for the future of the university and the higher education sector as a whole.
