DUKE TAKES CROWN!
Blue Devils stalk Jayhawks for NCAA title, 72-65

By MARK JAFFE
INDIANAPOLIS — For the first time in its history, the men’s basketball team captured an NCAA Championship. The Blue Devils used a 17-7 run early in the second half to pull away from Kansas and fought off a furious late-game assault by the Jayhawks to win, 72-65, Monday night at the Hoosier Dome.

"I’m so happy for our guys," said head coach Mike Krzyzewski. "I’m not sure if anyone’s ever played harder for 80 minutes to win a national title."

The Blue Devils (32-7) had fallen short of the championship in eight previous trips to the Final Four, including four of the last five years. But in 1991 Duke would not be denied.

"I feel good but [not winning the title] has never been a monkey on my back," Krzyzewski said. "Did you see the players’ faces? I looked at my three daughters and saw them crying. I’m just so happy."

Christian Laettner, the most outstanding player of the tournament, had his first double-double—18 points and 10 rebounds—in 12 games to lead Duke.

"I'm just very happy about [most outstanding player honors]," Laettner said. "But there are more things I’m more happy about — a national championship, a big trophy for coach to bring back to Duke. We’re in it for the team — not the individual."

Sophomore guard Bill McCaffrey, another all-tournament selection, had seven points, a streaking layup, a three-pointer and another long range jumper, during the decisive run. He finished with 16 points on six-of-eight shooting.

During the 17-7 streak and following a television timeout, Krzyzewski called for a backdoor lob play. Hurley complied by flipping an alley-oop to Brian Davis over the Kansas zone. Davis hauled in the pass and slammed it home to give Duke a 53-43 lead.

Hurley was the third Duke selection to the all-tournament team. He had 12 points and nine assists.

The Blue Devils took a 42-34 lead into halftime after Thomas Hill drilled a 21-foot three-pointer from the left wing seconds before the buzzer.

Trailing 66-56 with 2:52 left in the game, the Jayhawks began to mount a furious rally. Adonis Jordan, the Jayhawks’ point guard, slashed to the basket for a 10-foot jumper, which cut Duke’s lead to 70-65 with 34 seconds left.

After Thomas Hill called a timeout near half-court, Grant Hill inbounded to Brian Davis who streaked to the basket for an uncontested slam dunk to cap Duke’s first NCAA Championship.

Duke kicks Kans-ass
Blue Devils topple Jayhawks to win National Championship

By MICHAEL SAUL
The sweet smell of victory sparked pandemonium as thousands of University students encircled a blazing bonfire outside Cameron Indoor Stadium Monday night to celebrate Duke's 72-65 triumph over Kansas to take the national championship in men's basketball.

"It feels unbelievable, incredible, truly amazing. I don't think words could describe it," said Jeff Feldstein, a Trinity sophomore, after he climbed down from a tree outside Cameron. "I'm having so much fun. I don't know what to do. Get naked? Drink beer? Get champagne?"

Dancing amid the firelight and the shadows, the beer-splashed throng of students reveled in the thrill of victory. As multi-colored firecrackers helped illuminate the night with excitement students yowled, "We're number one... we did it.

The jubilant frenzy inspired several University men to shed their clothes and dance naked around the fiery flames which blazed in the parking lot outside Cameron. "We're number one... we did it.

The celebration began after the buzzer sounded and declared Duke's basketball team champions, but some students began the festivities at 4:30 p.m. as they waited outside Cameron. "I think it's worth waiting outside all this time. It's for our team," said Elizabeth Duvinage, a Trinity senior, who has earned the distinction of being a campus hero.

Duke dominated Kansas with a strangling defense which limited the Jayhawks to 41.5 percent field goal shooting. While Kansas' senior leader Mark Randall had 18 points and 10 rebounds, Christian Laettner effectively denied him the ball. The 6-9 forward took nine shots.

Duke played a great defense tonight," said Kansas point guard Adonis Jordan, who scored 11 points. "They were out in the passing lanes, making it real hard to get the ball to Mark."
Refugees want sanctuary:

Thousands of Iraqi refugees are shuttled between United States Army checkpoints, given some food and told to move on, as they search sanctuary from fighting.

Trial by one's peers?

The Supreme Court on Monday broadened the right of criminal defendants to object to the use of race in jury selection. Expanding on a 1986 decision that permitted black defendants to challenge the prosecution's exclusion of black jurors, the court declared that the use of racial criteria in the government's selection of a jury is unconstitutional.

Great benefits:

House members who retire from Congress after the next election will get a hefty pension increase — as much as $7,000 annually for a 12-year veteran — because the big pay raise they voted themselves last year.

TRIBANA, Albania — The Communist Party, entrenched for more than four decades, overcame voting setbacks in Albania's cities and returned to power in this country's first modern and free elections, all parties agreed Monday.

Among the bitter setbacks in the election on Sunday was the defeat of President Berisha, the head of the nation's Communist Party, in his parliamentary district in the capital by a young geologist representing the newly formed opposition Democratic Party.

While official results were not available, a Police minister, Xheled Gjoni, claimed victory for the Communists at a news conference Monday afternoon. "The party, with Ramiza Abla at its head, is the main party in Albania and enjoys the support of the masses," he said.

It is not clear under the election rules whether Abla will be re-elected president. "The foreign minister, Muhamet Kapllani, was reportedly also defeated."

Shortly after Gjoni spoke, Sal Gjoni, head of the Democrats, conceded that his party had failed to achieve a majority in the 250-seat Parliament, despite huge margins in Albania's six largest cities.

The Communists won more than 160 seats, mainly in rural districts where 60 percent of the 3.5 million Albanians live. Berisha said preliminary returns indicated that the Democrats had won 72 seats.

Some opposition figures said that in some rural regions Communist party control was so great that votes were left uncounted.

In contests where no candidate won an outright majority, runoff elections will be held.

Founded last December during the turmoil of huge anti-Communist demonstrations, the Democrats were overwhelmingly endorsed in Albania's urban centers but lost in the mountainous countryside.

There were indications of widespread intimidation of voters in the countryside by the Communists and some charges of ballot rigging.

German official murdered

DUESSELDORF, Germany — Detlev Rohwedder, head of the agency charged with privatizing former East Germany's economy, was shot and killed in his home late Monday, a police spokesman said.

Rohwedder was also wounded in the attack about 11:30 p.m. local time (5:30 EST), the ZDF television channel reported, quoting police. It said her injuries were not life-threatening.

An anonymous telephone caller claimed responsibility for the Red Army Faction, a Marxist terrorist group linked to more than 60 assassinations, said Rolf Heinrich, a spokesman for the chief federal prosecutor's office.

Hannich said the call went to the Paris office of the French news agency Agence France-Presse, but its authenticity was not immediately determined.

Police closed off the bridges across the Rhine River near Dusseldorf, about 120 miles northwest of Frankfurt.

Rohwedder, 59, was the head of the Treuhandanstalt, the government agency undertaking the historic task of reorganizing the eastern German economy. In the next several years about 8,000 former state companies are scheduled to be privatized.

The Marxist Red Army Faction evolved from the Baader-Meinhof group formed in 1968 in former West Germany. The group seeks to topple the capitalist system and bring global revolution. It has an estimated 20 to 30 members.

Among the killings it has claimed is the 1989 bomb assassination in Bad Homburg of Alfred Herrhausen, one of the most powerful bankers in Europe.

Rohwedder gained prominence as one of West Germany's most capable managers as chairman of the giant Hoechst company, a rival of Bayer.

Public Safety hires additional temporary force, closes roads

By COLIN BROWN

Duke Public Safety tripled campus security in preparation for postgame activity last night. To help out in the aftermath, Public Safety enlisted the assistance of the sheriff's police and the North Carolina Highway Patrol.

The responsibility of the safety of the campus rested in the hands of Lewis Wardell, chief of police at the University of North Carolina Medical Center, and A.B. Washington, campus police chief. Washington patrolled Cameron Indoor Stadium and the surrounding area, while Wardell staked his claim to the rest of West Campus.

At a news conference yesterday, Washington and Wardell announced that the main goal of the officers would be to maintain a safe postgame celebration, as opposed to other times, when the focus was on the security of Cameron itself.

The extra security measures were in effect when Public Safety officers started submitting people into Cameron to watch the game on large screen television. Washington said. Cameron was open to anyone connected to the University (students, faculty, employees) and a certain number of guest passes were distributed, Washington said.

The security at the televised game in Cameron was not different from the security of any other basketball game except it covered "a much larger area," Wardell said.

The amount of security would not be dependent on the outcome of the game, Wardell said. "If we had a Duke win from an officer's point of view, there was concern for danger in the midst of a jubilee, however. "I hope there will be no significant incidents, but with a crowd that large, anything can happen," Washington said.

Public Safety closed Wannamaker Drive, Tigerwood Road from Science Drive to Duke University Road, and Science Drive from Route 761 to Tigerwood Road.

Duke Transit dismisses driver involved in bus accident

By MICHAEL SAUL

Reginald Marshall, the driver involved in a bus crash on Campus Drive last Monday, has been dismissed.

Marshall's bus collided into another bus causing limited injuries, but shattering the windshield of Marshall's bus and busting the fiberglass on the other bus' bumper.

"Instead of saying the brakes are bad and causing an uproar on Duke campus, it was easier to fire," Marshall said. "They told me they didn't need me anymore."

Prior to this accident, Marshall has hit one other bus, he was suspended by University transit automobile after making a sharp turn around a corner, said Michael Yochelson, University transit student supervisor.

Marshall is a student at N.C. Central University who was using the money he earned as a bus driver to help finance his education.

"I believe they were unfair, but I don't hold any resentment," he said. "The brakes aren't always as bad as last Monday, but under the circumstances anybody would have gotten into a crash."

Marshall said his bus was filled to capacity, the other bus stopped short and the brakes weren't working properly.

Other University bus drivers claim the driver needs to adjust for each different bus. "You have to know your limitations and be able to gauge stopping distances," said Curtis Hamilton, a University bus driver and a Trinity senior. "If [Marshall] thought his brakes were not working properly, it was his responsibility to call in."

Hamilton said the transit office will give a driver a new bus if the first bus is defective. If no additional buses are available, the route would be discontinued, he said.

David Majestic, director of University transportation services, said last week no decision would be made concerning Marshall's punishment until Duke Public Safety published a report on the crash. Despite Majestic's insistence on waiting, Marshall was fired Monday evening, before the report was issued.

"There are certain situations when it is not necessary to see the report," said John Manning, manager of transportation services.

Bradford of Duke Public Safety.

Injuries were limited and benign, mostly from fights and hurling beer bottles, Bradford said.

The Duke University Emergency Room declined to release any information describing the number of injuries incurred by University students during the celebration.

Public Safety did not receive any reports of vandalism or theft, but most students were warned after the semi-finals on Saturday to be careful and lock doors in order to prevent potential problems.

University of North Carolina Public Safety reported no vandalism at 2:16 a.m. "But, we're expecting it. The typical thing is to spray-paint with dark blue paint," said Aaron Garrison, the dispatcher for UNC Public Safety.

Students began to return to the dormitories after 10:00 a.m. in order to rest and prepare to welcome the victors at noon on Tuesday in Cameron.

"We're the fucking best there is," said a jovial Alan Gallatin, a first-year law student for the Duke Blue Devils behind the rim of the Cameron Indoor Stadium. "We're going to win the title!"

Students show compatibility in new exhibit

By SAM WARE

Silkscreens, woodcuts and monotypes highlight the most recent exhibit, a display in Perkins Library, "The Printed Image: Selected Works by Anna Jamell Snowdon and Eleanor Scott Lombardi," will be on display in the Doyle Hart Reading Room through April 5.

Snowdon, a Trinity senior, has joined Scott, a student in the Continuing Education program, because of what they consider their complementary styles. After working together in our classes, we began to realize how much each of our works complemented the other — both in style and in their emotive qualities," explains the artists' statement found in the gallery.

The exhibit's variety illustrates the many approaches to printmaking. Among the works shown are five monoprints, two collages, two linoleum block prints, three woodblock prints and one silkscreen. Snowdon and Scott also added several sculptures to the collection, four done in steel and one in wood, in addition to a small silkscreened quilt.

The artists have also included in the exhibit the blocks used for the printing process. The artists' statement explains that the blocks are included "to give a sense of the process as integral to each piece." The statement adds, "In printmaking, the craft is often what determines the finished image."

Snowdon, an Art History and Studio Art double major, has contributed probably the most interesting if not most provocative work of the exhibit. "Burning Babies" is a silkscreen depicting a row of crying babies in black on a background of overlapping bright orange, red and yellow swatches.

Another of Snowdon's prints, which was done using the carved woodblock technique, is a monochromatic likeness of a woman kneeling. The print uses blocks of medium brown intersected by strips of dark blue and highlighted by flecks of light blue to define the stylistically abstract but visually realistic figure.

I like things that involve cutting.

Anna Snowdon

Scott's "Olive Trees in Sirmione" uses a different printing method. Referred to as a collagraph, this print is created "by the collaging of textured pieces of heavy cardboard, coated with a glossy medium, then inked and printed." This technique, in addition to the ink image, creates an added quality through the impressions formed by the textured cardboard. "Olive Trees in Sirmione" consists of three separate prints, the first of which presents a stream winding through a grove of trees. The second and third show closer views of stylized tree trunks.

Snowdon and Scott first met last semester in a printmaking and a sculpture class. In these classes they soon recognized the similarities in one another's styles.

Although she has experimented in art since an early age, Snowdon says she really enjoyed, "I like things that involve cutting," she said. Although she currently has no definite plans for the future, Snowdon would like to continue silkscreening, possibly working in California for a while. She hopes to attend architecture school in two years.

Scott, who majored in English at Bowdoin College, attended two summer programs at the Rhode Island School of Design and is now attending design classes at the University. She hopes to compile a portfolio while here and eventually attend a graduate school for design.

U.S. shuts down arms traders

By SCOTT SHEPARD
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. government moved Monday to shut down the secret network of arms traders and financial firms that it claims were used by President Saddam Hussein to build Iraq's war machine and to enrich himself.

The Treasury Department acted to freeze the assets of 52 businesses and 37 individuals around the world that had "demonstrated a pattern" of representing the Iraqi government.

The department's list of "front" companies included two in the United States: Bay Industries Inc., an engineering firm in Santa Monica, Calif., and Matrix Churchill Corp., a machine tools company in Cleveland, Ohio.

The Treasury Department also named 180 Iraqi-owned or -controlled merchant ships and prohibited their use by U.S. companies or individuals.

All transactions under U.S. jurisdiction with those companies and middlemen are equivalent to doing business with the Iraqi government and are prohibited without Treasury Department permission.

Violations carry criminal penalties of up to $1 million for both companies and individuals and prison terms of up to 12 years. Civil penalties of up to $325,000 also may be imposed.

Deputy Treasury Secretary John Robson said some of the frozen assets of these companies may eventually be used to pay reparations for the successful U.S.-led war to end Iraq's occupation of Kuwait.

"Over the last decade, Saddam strengthened the sinews of his war machine through a sophisticated network of front companies and agents. Through it, he got weapons, spare parts, machine tools and raw materials necessary to sustain his militarized state," Robson said.

Little Rascals day care tried on sexual abuse charges

By ESTES THOMPSON
Associated Press

FARMVILLE, N.C. — Prosecutors in the Little Rascals day care sex-abuse trial asked a judge Monday to quash defense subpoenas, which would require the parents of the abused children to be in court for the entire trial.

The trial is expected to last two to four months, authorities have said.

Chowan County District Attorney H.P. Williams and Bill Hart, an assistant attorney general who is helping to prosecute the case, said parents have called them about the subpoenas.

Among the other motions is one to dismiss all charges against Robert Kelly, Jr., 42, who is charged with 248 counts of sexually abusing 29 children at the center.

By April 8.

That motion was not discussed in court Monday.

But defense attorney Michael Spivey of Tarboro said the subpoenas were necessary for his client to have a fair trial.

Spivey said that the hearing would continue 10 a.m. Tuesday.

Prosecutors are trying to quash subpoenas of 50 to 60 people, including children at 10 a.m. Tuesday.

The subpoenas are necessary because the defense must argue against the following allegations, which have been made against some defendants, Spivey said:

— that the operator in the center urinated and defecated on the children every day.

— that snakes were turned loose.

— that child said she was taken to her own home and cooked in a microwave oven.

— that children swam naked off of a boat with employees of the day-care center.

Retired Superior Court Judge Marsh McLeland of Burlington, who is hearing the case, did not issue a decision on the motion to quash or several other motions.

He did say that the hearing would continue 10 a.m. Tuesday.

Traveling blues

Traveling from place to place on campus should be no more dangerous than travelling off campus. But due to the University transportation systems, many students are often placed in precarious situations.

Even though there is a campus-wide 25 mph speed limit, most University bus drivers do not come close to that speed. This is not an arbitrary number; that low speed is the limit because it is a safe speed at which to drive. How many times have students in the back car of a two-car bus felt as if they were about to plow into the bridge by East Campus at 25 mph during rainy days? The accounts of crazy bus rides on campus are innumerable and have, in some instances, taken on legendary proportions.

Why do campus bus drivers drive so haphazardly? It certainly is not because they are trying to be early to their schedules. Students often wait at the West Campus bus stop for 15 or 20 minutes during class periods for a bus. While four or five buses might be in limbo on East Campus, one bus might be running between East and West. What is needed to provide a reliable service for students who need to go between campuses?

There are those students who, because of university scheduling and the unreliable service, have abandoned travelling by bus. Instead, they drive themselves or walk or ride bicycles to get where they need to go. Even these self-determined, environmentally conscious, well meaning students are at risk. Last semester, at least one bicyclist was hit by a University bus.

On the record

I'm not sure if anyone's ever played harder for 80 minutes to win a national title.

Head basketball coach Mike Krzyzewski, describing the effort of the NCAA champion Duke Blue Devils as they defeated top-ranked UNLV and 12th-ranked Kansas in the Final Four in Indianapolis.

Red Cross would not have approved of fraternity's irresponsible use of slogans

To the editor:

Picture a sign that read: "Kill Hussein and help the American Red Cross. Make a small donation and if you kill him you get twice your money back." This was the message on the East Campus, March 28.

Anybody that kills innocent people deserves to be put under the guise of "just fun"? I ignore it and walk on.

To the editor:

Too many workers, not enough production

To the editor:

At first consideration the point of this letter may seem trivial but I believe the points mentioned are much more far-reaching than may be immediately obvious.

I work in one of the Medical Center research buildings and have worked here since Aug. 1990. I noticed after a short time that the restrooms appeared to be performed worse than usual. They appeared to be coated their interior. I thought this was quite a shame, seeing that the tile work was actually quite nice and assumed that this was some sort of construction snafu which resulted in a situation which could not be remedied, even in sandblasting.

However, I am still outraged at the blatant bigotry displayed by the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity fund-raiser that you woke up this morning and wanted to rub off a little. Like magic the tiles became perfectly fine. I suggest that staff numbers be drastically reduced (probably 1/2 to 1/2 x current pay perhaps), then actually demand a fair day's work from those employees.

The The National Championship completes a Duke education

The education I've gotten at Duke will be with me forever: the base of knowledge and the ability to think critically that were fostered here will burgeon as I go forth into the world not because of the degree I'll soon have in my hand but because of the experiences I have in my head.

Now, we, not just the basketball players and coaches, can forever say we were the National Champions in 1991. That's profound for those of us who didn't get a Final Four. You've been spoiled beyond reality. But until last night our basketball euphoria has always turned to bittersweet's was.

By not helping Iraqi rebels, Bush is actually aiding Saddam

Why has President Bush rejected his own human and military instinct to prevent Saddam Hussein's gunship helicopters from massacring Iraqi rebels? Why, when a White House order would have grounded them?

And the larger mystery: Why has the United States turned its back on the rebels after the President repeatedly urged the Iraqi people to get rid of Saddam Hussein themselves?

Evidently, Americans ask those questions. Bush has not yet favored them with an answer. But it can be found, if we look inward — into the mistakes and flaws of U.S. policy.

Once again, America is trying to stop the future from unfolding because it is afraid of and does not know how to deal with the results of freedom, has shown that it does not have the stomach for the risk that both involve.

Let's junk the deliberately misleading argument that Saddam's tanks?

Washington says Saddam will go one day. Maybe. But this is certain: The betrayal by the U.S. will not be forgotten by rebels anywhere.

Anyway, were Americans sent into combat against Saddam so that Washington should now help him keep the peace he has promised?

A president's job is to listen to bureaucrats, then steer us course. Bush earned Americans' trust by doing that in the Persian Gulf war.

But for the U.S., distinctly honor, duty and self-interest with freedom supported, democracy fostered, pledges kept.

Mr. Bush, what have you done for us lately?

Goldsboro police sued for abuse

GOLDSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Swann testimony shows that James Earl Swann Jr. died at the hands of police, says an attorney who helped reach a $220,000 settlement in a suit Swann’s family brought against the city of Goldsboro.

Swann, a 27-year-old Washington, D.C., resident, died Feb. 1, 1989, in the back seat of a patrol car following his arrest by two Goldsboro police officers. An autopsy by the state Medical Examiner’s office revealed he died of lack of oxygen due to neck compression.

His family brought a $6 million lawsuit against the city.

The Goldsboro City Council, in a statement released Monday, said the lawsuit was ‘‘baseless and without merit.’’ The decision to settle out of court was made by the city’s insurance carrier, Clarendon National Insurance Co. of High Point, according to City Manager Richard Swartz.

‘‘The City’s liability insurance carrier, against the strong protests of this City, has seen fit to resolve this claims and to pay the Estate of Mr. Swann the sum of $220,000 in settlement of all claims,’’ the statement says.

City officials say Swann was neither ‘‘beaten nor brutalized,’’ and point out a medical examiner found he had ingested cocaine prior to his death.

But Dean Swarts, a Washington, D.C., attorney representing the Swann family, told the Goldsboro News-Argus in an interview published Monday that sworn depositions taken from police officers and witnesses to the incident indicate Swann was beaten and died at police hands.

According to Swarts, a deposition given by Cpl. James F. Green Jr. before U.S. District Court officials says he squeezed Swann around the throat with his hands at least twice until he ‘‘relaxed.’’

City officials have previously said that Sgt. Glenn Barnes, the other officer involved in the incident, had placed his knee on Swann’s neck. A deposition taken by Barnes also says he struck Swann around the throat with his hands at least twice until he ‘‘relaxed.’’

Laettner garners Most Outstanding Player recognition

By KRIS OLSON

INDIANAPOLIS — The men's basketball team entered the season knowing that Christian Laettner would probably lead the team in points and rebounds. If that happened, Laettner would undoubtedly get attention as one of the nation's top collegiate players.

But if the team wanted more than individual accolades, for instance, Laettner would have to do more. Laettner needed to lead not only in statistics, but in heart and intensity as well.

Duke now rejoices as the 1991 NCAA Champions, gaining its first national title with a 72-65 victory over Kansas. This followed a win over previously undefeated UNLV. To say that Laettner merely filled the team in points and rebounds. If that's what the team was feeling up with Laettner. Laettner drew Ackles off. That type of easy basket was almost

The matchup was no better for Kansas than the UNLV game in the first 3:02, as Duke stormed out to an early 15-6 lead. Part of the reason for Laettner's success was quick to point out that Laettner was going to the Superbowl five out of six years. Did you see their faces? I looked at my three daughters and saw the tears in their eyes. I hope we do it again."

"We feel that we won it for one another, for Coach K and ourselves," said Koubek. "But we also feel happy for [past players] because Billy King, Kevin Strickland, all those guys who have played have added so much to me as a player and added to other guys. We sure do share in this victory and are very happy for us."

Thesunbirds were particularly high for Duke's two seniors who closed out their careers by taking home the biggest prize. "This is the best day of my life," said Davis. "It's a nice payoff for everybody who has been involved with us."

"We're happy to win the national championship, the people in the program, the people in the state, the people in the country," said Davis. "We're going to have the biggest celebration like this," said Davis. "We're going to have the biggest celebration like this."

"It feels really great," said the other co-captain, Chris Bukowy. "It's a nice payoff for four years of hard work."

The entire team could not wait to board the plane back to Durham to join in the partying back on campus and show off the trophy. "If you're going to have a party at all ever, because there isn't enough room to hold it anywhere else. We're going to have the biggest party ever."

When asked in the lockerroom what he was going to do on campus, Thomas Hill replied, "What aren't they doing on campus?"

But for all the immediate outpouring of emotion, this victory will be one to be
Lack of mental errors was key to Blue Devils title run

INDIANAPOLIS—The men’s basketball team brought the field of the 1991 NCAA Division tournament to its knees by using its head.

Duke’s singular purpose entering the tournament, and the season, was to win the first national title in school history. Nothing, including treating losses or monumental wins could ever shake the Blue Devils’ fixation on that mission.

“Mental intensity was the main reason we won,” said sophomore Bill McCaffrey. “We weren’t satisfied.”

Head coach Mike Krzyzewski deserves the credit for maintaining the high level of intensity among the players throughout the tournament. He literally allowed the players mere seconds to celebrate possibly one of the biggest upset in Final Four history, Duke’s 78-77 win over UNLV.

“As soon as the game was over, we got on to the next thing,” said Krzyzewski.

This year’s attitude of focusing immediately on the next game contrasts sharply with the reaction to last year’s win over UNLV.

“[Mental intensity] was the main reason we won,” said senior Clay Buckley. “We just kept quiet and went to work.”

Indications were that whatever the Blue Devils had did not begin after the game, but perhaps the single player who best embodies the team’s mission was to win the first national title in school history, was senior Clay Buckley.

A lot of people doubted us in the beginning of the year. We just kept quiet and went to work.

Clay Buckley

The way we handled the [Arkansas] win last year was expected. This defense was vulnerable to a lob pass for an easy basket. Hurley threw the pass, which Brian Davis vaulted to catch and slam home for a resolve-wrecking alley-op jam.

“[Mental intensity] was the main reason we won,” said senior Clay Buckley. “We just kept quiet and went to work.”

But by no means did this attitude begin after the final game. This year was different.

“People were so mature in the way we handled it,” said senior Greg Koubek. “We weren’t satisfied.”

“We especially wanted to celebrate after that Vegas win, but we had to come right back,” said Buckley.

But no matter how hard it might have been not to savor those accomplishments, the team now realizes the importance of keeping their thoughts and concerns in the present and near future.

“We realized that when we’re focused and play with intensity, we can play with anyone,” said Grant Hill.

Krzyzewski instills toughness through challenging schedule

By Mark Jaffe

INDIANAPOLIS—Toughness made the difference for the men's basketball team. In the Krzyzewski Era, Duke has made five trips to the Final Four, but the Blue Devils lacked a special toughness. Not the "Hangin' Tough" toughness of the New Kids on the Block, but the hard edge, rough and rugged toughness which spurs teams to national championships. Not UNLV. Not Kansas.

"We have had a very difficult schedule all year. We are not going to back down from anyone," said Krzyzewski. "Our schedule has definitely helped us," Krzyzewski said. "We did it this way because we thought it would help us in the NCAA."

"Our one thing that we thought we could bring to this game [UNLV] was a fighting battle," said Hurley, the 6-6 warrior. "We have had a very difficult schedule all year. We are not going to back down from anyone.

Duke survives late Jayhawk rally to run away with title

Hill tossed a strike to Davis, who proceeded to dunk his way into Duke basketball annals.

Final score—72-65. Game, tournament, 1991 national title to the Blue Devils.

Laettner, the tournament’s most outstanding player, had his first double-double in 12 games—18 points and 10 rebounds—in leading Duke to the title. Although Kansas, especially Randall, made it exceedingly difficult throughout the game for the Blue Devils to get the ball to Laettner, the 6-11 junior kept his focus.

“I wasn’t sure of anything,” said Krzyzewski, who remains the winningest active coach in NCAA tournament winning percentage at 27-7. “There was a lot of pressure on Grant for that inbounds. Once we got that dunk, I knew they needed three possessions and they had no timeouts. I went to my staff and thanked them.”
Defensive intensity keys NCAA championship win

The Blue Devils used an early second-half run to pull away from the Jayhawks and give themselves the cushion required to stave off the Kansas rally.

Bill McCaffrey ignited the 17-7 streak with an 18-foot jumper from the left wing. The 6-3 sophomore guard, who was named to the all-tournament team for his 16 points on 6-8 field goal shooting, would score seven points during the span, including a three-pointer and a layup.

Grant Hill continued the surge with a French pastry pull-up jumper in the lane to make it 48-40. Less than two minutes later, after a television timeout, Hurley fed Davis with an alley-oop dunk to give Duke its largest lead of the game to that point, 53-43.

"Coach pretty much called that in the huddle," Hurley said. "We figured that they might play a 1-3-1 zone. It's a good call for coach. It's about time," Hurley quipped.

Hurley finished with 12 points and nine assists and earned a spot on the all-tournament team. He also finished the run with a 35-foot pass to McCaffrey for a layup and two free throws to push Duke to an insurmountable 61-47.

Laettner shoots perfectly from line against Kansas

As a freshman, Laettner outdueled the more highly-touted freshman center from Georgetown, Alonzo Mourning in the East Regional final. Earlier this year, he schooled consensus first-team all-America Shaquille O'Neal of LSU. It was viewing film of this game in particular which worried Tarkanian before Saturday night.

"We knew Laettner killed Shaquille O'Neal by taking him to the high post," said Tarkanian.

"He played the best in the most important game," said Koubek. "He really came through in the clutch and he's someone we all look up to."
Kongraczyulations, Mike.

Now that Coach Krzyzewski and the Duke Blue Devils have just won the 1991 NCAA Championship, perhaps it's time we all did a little celebrating.
