Union elects new president

By DEAN ROMHILT

Trinity sophomore Chris Maughan was elected president of the Duke University Union Friday night by the Union Board.

Heather Whitaker, a Trinity junior, was the only other candidate.

Maughan will replace Trinity senior Tom Talbot who has been president of the Union since last spring.

"Chris is terribly qualified," said Talbot. "He has a great vision for the future of the Union."

The University Union is the major programming body on campus. It has a budget of almost $500,000, much of which comes from the student activities fees, graduate and professional student fees, and the University student affairs office.

The Union has 13 committees which are responsible for coordinating events like Freewater films, Cable 13, Broadway at Duke and many major concerts and speakers.

Welcome home, Rodney

Duke's Thomas Hill did not exactly roll out the red carpet for Wake Forest forward Rodney Rogers, a Durham native.

In-state applications down by 22 percent

By NOAH BIEMAN

Admissions officers found North Carolinians conspicuously absent from this year's applicant pool: the number of in-state applicants dropped 22 percent from last year.

Harold Wingood, acting director of admissions, said he was at a loss to explain why.

Duke may have lost North Carolinians because of the recession and the close proximity and lower tuition of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Wingood said, but otherwise he could not interpret the fall.

"We would like to maintain a strong precedence of students from North Carolina," he said. Last fall, 12.4 percent of the incoming students were North Carolinians.

The large drop is especially surprising, Wingood said, because a large number of area high school students have visited the University, which is traditionally a strong indication of interest.

Despite the drop, there are no new recruiting programs scheduled to attract more in-state residents for the following year, Wingood said.

Overall applications are about the same as last year's large pool with 14,052 applications counted as of Friday. An additional 284 applications are scheduled to be processed in the next few weeks.

The number of applicants has not increased significantly despite last year's men's basketball national championship. The class of 1996 marks the first to apply since the win.

While the University's success in athletics has helped increase national exposure, it may be overshadowing academics, Wingood said.

Many top high school students apply and are accepted, Wingood said, but they choose to go elsewhere because the University's reputation focuses on athletics rather than academics.

"After we send out our offers of admission, whether or not we've won a basketball championship is not going to convince a physicist [to attend the University]," he said.

The public relations department needs to change the University's image, he said.

School merger plans stalled over composition of new board

By LEIGH DYER

Each day in the process of designing a merger of the Durham city and county school systems brings more questions than answers.

Numerous elected and appointed bodies on the local and the state levels have been vying for the final decision-making authority in the contentious proposal, and it is now less clear than ever who will ultimately get to call the shots.

Everyone seems to agree that the merger, slated for July, offers the best hope for improving Durham's lagging schools. The Durham County Board of Commissioners has been designing a plan for the merger for months.

But what the county commission, the city school board, the county school board, the state board of education and just about everyone else in Durham and even elsewhere in the state have not been able to agree on is how to elect a school board for the merged system.

"If you look at the plan in total, the issues that we're disagreeing about aren't educational issues," said Bill Bell, chair of the county commission. "What we're down to now is how we're going to share some type of equitable representation."

The county commission will try to hammer out a last-ditch compromise this week which could go before the state board of education in February. But in the meantime, they must contend with an upcoming lawsuit, deal with the possibility that the merger may be implemented through the General Assembly, and face questions on the validity of the state law that has been allowing them to design the merger plan in the first place.

The compromise, dubbed the 4-2-1 plan, was initially hailed as the only way to bring together the racially polarized opposition in the merger debate when it was introduced in December. It attempts to unite concerns that the merged school board be responsive to minority interests with concerns that all citizens be allowed to vote for more than one member of the merged school board.

"Durham has been embroiled in this extremely delicate and difficult issue for several months, and it's a shame, because it has torn the community apart," said Commissioner Ellen Reckhow, who helped author the 4-2-1 plan

University barber leaves trademark

Ultra short Albert-cuts adorn heads on campus

By ERIC LARSON

When Albert Starr was 10 years old he was already turning heads.

As a barber at the Duke University Barber Shop, he's still turning them.

"A little to the right, please." Snip, snip.

Since he began cutting hair in the Union Building on West campus in 1969, Starr's haircuts for men have become trademark. Find a professor or student on campus with an ultra-thin ear-lowering and you can bet it's Starr's doing. Ask for the name of the style and the person will tell you: It's an "Albert-cut."

"You have a real need for short haircuts on campus," Starr says. ROTC students require short hair, and ever since the Persian Gulf War crew-cuts have become a trend among the general male population. Lawrence Liao, a Trinity senior, has been going to Starr exclusively since he was a freshman.

"Albert is very efficient," says Liao. "He goes right in there and chops it off."

"He pretty much did his own thing," attests Edward Olson, a Trinity freshman. One Albert-cut was enough for him. "I didn't feel I was left with much hair."

Starr, a man of slight build who is an authority on most subjects ever brought up in barbershop conversation, denies taking marital pleasure mowing down hair. "I don't particularly like to cut it extremely short," he professes. It's simply the style he first learned in the '30s.

Albert's career began at a magical moment, when he was a fifth grader in Kings Mountain, N.C. Flipping casually through a Sears and Roebuck catalog in his family room one afternoon, an advertisement for a shiny new pair of hair scissors caught his eye.

Quietly noticing his face light up, Albert's mother ordered the scissors for him that week. Thus, a career was born.

"I was so proud of those scissors," Albert remembers. "I carried them in my back pocket to school."

Everyone's hair was fair game. After school Albert would haunt the football field where the older

U.N. members not paying full share for peace

By PAUL LEWIS
N.Y. Times News Service

UNITED NATIONS — At a meeting here on Friday, President Bush and the leaders of the 14 other members of the Security Council are expected to call on the United Nations to play a growing role in preserving peace in trouble spots around the globe. But the organization finds itself facing a deepening financial crisis because many of these same member states are not paying their share for the operations.

The United Nations has been called upon to mount eight new peacekeeping operations since 1988, compared with 13 in its previous 43 years of existence. This year it is planning ambitious new operations in Cambodia and Yugoslavia involving some 15,000 troops and policemen and which could double the organization's peacekeeping budget to more than $1 billion.

This means that the United States, which pays 30.38 percent of these bills under a formula assessing members according to their wealth, could see its assessments for peacekeeping rise from around $197 million last year to at least $300 million.

But no one here knows whether the members will pay the new assessments.

The United States and other leading members already owe the United Nations hundreds of millions of dollars in unpaid peacekeeping dues. At the end of last year, member states collectively owed the United Nations $377 million in overdue peacekeeping assessments. While this debt was less than the record $444.1 million they owed at the end of 1989, the figure still represents the second highest peacekeeping arrearage on record.

The declaration that Bush and the others plan to issue this week is full of appeals to expand the organization's peacemaking role, but at present it contains no pledge to pay these unpaid bills. "The world's leaders are coming here to tell us to work harder," said a senior United Nations official who asked not to be identified. "But will they remember their checkbooks?"

The United States remains the biggest single delinquent on peacekeeping, owing $140 million at the end of last year.

But of the other four members with permanent Security Council seats, only China, which has the smallest share of the five, had paid its peacekeeping bills in full. Russia, which has taken over the debts and the Security Council seat of the former Soviet Union, owed $126.7 million for peacekeeping at the end of last year, while France and Great Britain owed $10.4 million and $4 million respectively.

Of other leading contributors to the United Nations peacekeeping budget, Germany's unpaid assessments totaled $17 million, Ukraine owes $12.4 million, Poland $10 million, and Italy $5 million.

In addition to unpaid peacekeeping dues, all United Nations members owed another $439.3 million to the organization's regular budget which again was the second highest figure on record, though slightly lower than their cumulative debts at the end of 1989.

These unpaid regular budget contributions worsen the United Nations' budget crisis, officials say, by tightening the overall financial situation and making it harder to juggle funds between accounts.

Counting unpaid assessments for the regular budget, the United States' total debt to the United Nations stands at $739.4 million.

George Bush

These mounting debts have surprised and angered many top United Nations officials because the organization's peacekeeping role has been widely praised by governments and parliaments in recent years. In 1988, the United Nations was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for its peacekeeping efforts.

"It is a great irony," Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar said before stepping down last month, "that the United Nations is on the brink of insolvency at the very time the world community has entrusted the organization with new and unprecedented responsibilities. It is the member states who must collectively bear the responsibility for this most unfortunate situation."

Women make up majority of new 'underclass' in education

By ANU REDDY

Women are entering American universities at greater rates than they are being granted tenure at the professorial level, according to the College Press Service.

In 1991, there were 1 million more female students than male students at colleges and universities. In spite of this statistic, only 49 percent of the female faculty in colleges and universities hold tenure, while 71 percent of the male faculty hold tenure. Tenure is granted to faculty members by their peers and is guaranteed job protection.

Women at universities are complaining because they feel that female faculty members are assigned heavier teaching loads and more introductory classes.

There is now an "underclass" in the higher education system, said Lynn Weber, the director for the Center for Research on Women at Memphis State University. This

Ivory Towers

"underclass," which is mostly female, includes faculty members who are non-tenured or teach part-time.

These faculty members usually teach five courses while earning as little as $20,000 a year. Tenured professors sometimes teach one or two courses during a period of a few years.

Some women resort to litigation when they feel that they have been unfairly treated in the tenure process. When they do, however, they often find that their careers have been ruined, according to Anne Margolis. Margolis, a former associate professor at Williams College, pursued legal action when she was denied tenure and settled out of court.

Tri-Delts displeased: The president of the Delta Delta Delta sorority at the University of Pennsylvania is not pleased about a skit appearing on NBC's Saturday Night Live on Jan. 11, according to The Daily Pennsylvanian.

The skit satirized sororities, specifically TriDelts. "The skit certainly doesn't portray TriDelt on this campus," said Nicole Giallonardo, president of the sorority.

In the skit, sorority sisters were portrayed as "wide-eyed," and "giddy," The Daily Pennsylvanian reported. In one part, a sister answered the telephone saying, "Delta, Delta, Delta, can I helpya, helpya, helpya?" In another part of the skit, the sisters complained about ordering pizza and failing grades.

"[The skit is] a real slam to the entire Greek system," said Paula Turner, Tri-Delts national Executive Director.

Moon dust sale hindered: A student at Chesapeake College is trying to sell moon dust in order to pay for his college education, but the government is trying to stop him.

Steven Goodman received a four-inch piece of tape with moon dust stuck to it from his father whose job was to process the suits after the Apollo mission to the moon, according to the College Press Service.

Goodman recently found the piece of tape and wants to sell it for $20,000. The National Aeronautical Space Administration says, however, that the moon dust belongs to the government because it was brought back on the Apollo mission.

Because of the publicity surrounding the dust, Goodman has received calls from people around the world interested in buying the dust. He said he thinks the dust might be auctioned off and he could receive more than $20,000.

Race, class, gender conference to be held in Chapel Hill

From staff reports

A national conference on the politics of race, class and gender is scheduled to be held in Chapel Hill May 29-31.

The conference, funded by the Rockefeller and Ford Foundations, marks the 10th anniversary of the Duke University-University of North Carolina Center for Research on Women, according to Duke News Service.

Participants plan to examine the accomplishments of the new scholarship on race, class and gender as well as the political controversies that continue to surround this work.

Patricia Williams, professor at the University of Wisconsin Law School and author of "Alchemy of Race and Rights: Diary of a Law Professor," is scheduled to deliver the keynote address. Her topic is "Incredible Women: Sex, Lies and Sabotage of the Women's Movement."

Earl to debate bard's work: Charles Vere, Earl of Burford, is scheduled to address the controversy surrounding the work of William Shakespeare as it relates to his ancestor, Edward de Vere, Earl of Oxford, on Feb. 6 in the Sociology-Psychology building.

Vere heads a group of scholars who believe his ancestor to be the true author of the works credited to Shakespeare, according to Duke News Service.

The lecture is presented by the Major Speakers Committee of the Duke University Union.

Vere became Earl of Burford upon the death of his grandfather several years ago. He will eventually succeed his father as 15th Duke of St. Albans and will take his seat in the British Parliament's House of Lords.

Speaker to discuss Russians: An ethnographer who has conducted demographic sociological surveys of rural areas in Georgia, Estonia, Moldavia and Russia since 1970, is scheduled to speak on Wednesday.

Professor Yuri Vartanovich Arutunian is to present a lecture titled "The Changing Russian People," as part of a global forum series sponsored by the University's international studies center.

Arutunian is a professor at the Institute of Ethnology and Anthropology in Moscow and a visiting professor at the University's Center on East-West Trade, Investment and Communications.

Journalism panel scheduled: A panel of award-winning writers and photojournalists is scheduled to participate in a workshop Wednesday.

The workshop, "Creation of the Feature Project," is sponsored by the DeWitt Wallace Center for Communications and Journalism and features John Feinstein, current journalist-in-residence; James Steele, Pulitzer-Prize-winning investigative reporter for The Philadelphia Inquirer, and others, according to Duke News Service.

The workshop will be held from 3 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. in the Video Screening Room in the Bryan Center.

University author honored: A book written by a University professor and published by the University press recently received a national award for excellence from the Modern Language Association.

Fredrick Jameson, professor of comparative literature, wrote "Postmodernism, or, The Cultural Logic of Late Capitalism," which received the Modern Language Association's 22nd annual James Russell Lowell Prize for an Outstanding Book, according to Duke News Service.

The prize recognizes an outstanding literary or linguistic study, critical edition of an important work, or critical biography and consists of a $1,000 cash prize and a certificate.

The prize selection committee awarded honorable mention to Eve Sedgwick, professor of English, for her book "Epistemology of the Closet."

Commissioners optimistic that state board will approve plan

with Commissioner Mary Ann Black.

The compromise plan calls for Durham to be divided into four districts, two of which would have a majority of black voters. Each district would elect a school board member. The four districts would be combined into two larger districts, one comprised of a majority of black voters, which would each elect a member. Finally, one at-large school board member would be elected by all county voters.

Most of the commissioners have expressed at least grudging support for the plan, and all seem eager to finalize the issue at a public hearing scheduled for Jan. 29. However, the proposal has run into a few snags from both within and outside of the county commission.

Earlier this month, Bell submitted two modifications to the plan which would preclude holding a runoff for the at-large seat and involve offering the chairmanship of the board to the at-large winner. Reckhow expressed opposition to the modifications.

Bell maintains that he only submitted the proposals to generate public discussion and was not trying to hinder the plan. "Right now, I'm not wedded to anything," he said.

Bell and other commissioners expressed optimism that the compromise can be finalized at the Jan. 29 hearing, and said the plan has a strong chance of being approved by the state board of education at its February meeting. "I'm as confident as I can be, given all the variables, that merger can still be achieved by July," Bell said.

The variables in question include the possibility that the County Commission could be bypassed altogether in favor of passing a merger plan through the General Assembly. Last week, the Durham county school board adopted a resolution asking Sen. Ken Royall (D-Durham) to sponsor a bill making merger effective July 1 and determining the school board make-up.

County school board chair Joy Baldwin said Royall agreed to sponsor the measure. Royall could not be reached for comment.

County commissioners called the county school board resolution premature and unnecessary. "If their intent was to expedite the issue of merger, then I don't think that's going to happen," said commissioner Deborah Giles.

"The majority of the county school board members do not want merger unless it's under their conditions. That's the bottom line," Bell said.

Baldwin defended the move, saying the county school board was trying to ensure merger rather than postpone it. "I thought it was important to convey to the educational community... that there is another way of merging, by capitalizing on the legal means already in place."

Baldwin shrugged off concerns that the Durham delegation in the General Assembly is not unanimous in support of a merger proposal.

If the County Commission's 4-2-1 plan reaches the state board of education unscathed, its chances for approval are uncertain. Members of the state board have expressed willingness to approve the plan, so long as it enjoys broad-based community support.

"If the plan doesn't have [strong community support], then you might as well not merge," said state board member Pat Neal.

However, three lawsuits may hinder the state board from approving the plan. One was filed by the Durham County Commission in December alleging that the state board did not have the authority to reject its previously submitted merger plan, which would have elected school board members through seven single-member districts.

A second suit was filed by the Lenoir County Board of Education earlier that month to secure repeal of merger there.

The third suit, filed by a group of Lenoir parents last week, attacks the very law giving county commissions the authority to design school mergers. The law, which excludes local school boards from the merger process, was enacted by the General Assembly last summer.

Whether any of the lawsuits will have a direct effect on Durham's merger plan remains to be seen at the Feb. 6 state board meeting. In the meantime, the state board is anxious to see the issue resolved by whatever means possible, said state board of education coordinator Weaver Rogers.

"This is a case where you have to fly the airplane while you work on it at the same time," Rogers said.

Gardner denies he urged plan's rejection to get votes

By LEIGH DYER

N.C. Lieutenant Governor Jim Gardner is shrugging off allegations that he influenced the state board of education to reject Durham's merger plan in December out of political rather than educational motivations.

Some Durham officials have alleged that Gardner, who is running for Republican nomination for governor, urged rejection of the plan to gain support among the conservative majority in Durham.

"Listening to [Gardner] sitting there talking about what's best for the kids is enough to make one want to throw up," said outspoken city school board member Needham Bass.

"I don't think I need to gain any support among conservatives," Gardner said, adding he had conservative support in Durham even before the merger decision. He credited his rejection of the seven single-member district plan to the high level of opposition he perceived among the Durham community.

"If there's an unusual amount of opposition, then you ought not to turn your back on how the local people feel," he said, referring to a "high" volume of phone calls and letters from Durham residents opposing the seven-district plan.

"When you're an incumbent running for election, everything you do is suspect. It comes with the territory," Gardner added.

Weaver Rogers, coordinator of the state board of education, denied that Gardner influenced members of the state board to reject the plan.

Rogers defended the state board's decision as "objective," and denied that Gardner was motivated by election hopes.

Shamir hopes for compromise on loans

N.Y. Times News Service

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said on Sunday that the United States should "forget about" a freeze on Jewish settlements in the occupied territories, but also said he thought a compromise could be reached that would enable Washington to grant Israel much needed loan guarantees.

"We will now engage in a common effort to find a formula that will not contradict U.S. policy or this principle of ours," Shamir told a conference of Jewish journalists.

Shamir's comments were his first since Secretary of State James Baker III renewed negotiations on an Israeli request for $10 billion in loan guarantees at a meeting in Washington on Friday with Israel's ambassador, Zalman Shoval. The United States calls the building of settlements in the occupied territories an "obstacle to peace," and is linking the aid to the settlements issue.

"To avoid any misunderstandings," Shamir said, speaking in English, "Israel and all those people who represent Israel are not talking or not speaking about any freeze of settlements. Please forget about it."

"Further negotiations have to take place to find such a formula that could pave the way to the urgently needed guarantees," he also said.

Shamir did not make clear how he expected to resolve the dispute. But later, on Israel television, he said that he had a tentative agreement with the United States to provide the guarantees.

He said there was "a decision to grant these guarantees." "We haven't yet gone into details about how it would be implemented, and that we leave to the future."

There was no immediate United States reaction.

In his comments, Shamir appeared to be playing to two constituencies, Washington and the far-right politicians whose support he needs to hold his government together.

Admissions hopes to attract academicians

Wingood has initiated an effort within the admissions office to focus attention on some of the University's strong academic departments, but he will not see the results since he takes over as dean of admissions at Washington University in a few months.

"I for one, wish we could attract more academicians, more students who are really curious," he said.

Applicants identified by the admissions staff as the top tier are scheduled this year to receive letters from faculty members in the department in which they intend to major, Wingood said. Applicants who said they were unsure of their major are to receive letters from top students currently enrolled.

Another area Wingood targets for concern is the school's Asian population. While the applicant pool among Asians and the number accepted is high, the number of Asians who actually matriculate is low.

Wingood said the University has had problems attracting Asian students for two reasons: they are unaware of some of the school's academic strengths and many are intimidated by the lack of a larger Asian population.

Other issues, like the debate on political correctness, have not hurt the University's recruiting efforts, Wingood said.

"It's better to have a place where there is open discourse on those issues," he said.

Most applicants are interested in seeing the debate play out and stimulate further discussion, he said.

Starr's barbering career began with pair of shiny scissors

boys were practicing running, passing and kicking.

Albert practiced snipping.

"The players would kneel down for me, and I'd cut their hair right on the sidelines," Albert remembers.

You could say he made the team's first cut.

The players liked the job he did. "I was kind of a prodigy," he confesses. Noticing the finely groomed heads in the halls, the school's principal approached Albert one day with his own request: "Can you do that for me?"

Unfortunately, Albert was too short to reach the principal's head even when the man was sitting down at his desk. Frantically he searched the area and came up with the solution: a Coca-Cola bottle crate.

After that the job was no sweat.

"He was basically bald," admits a grown Albert, smiling. "He just had a few locks of hair in the back."

The principal told him it was the best haircut he had ever received. Reaching into his wallet, he pulled out $2.

"I couldn't believe it," recalls Starr. "Hell, I was in the fifth grade. The going price in big shops downtown was 50 cents."

Meanwhile, word had been spreading throughout the area about Albert's "shear" talent. Boys taking shortcuts through fields nearby would make a stop at Albert's front porch. The porch turned into a regular "clip joint."

Despite the demands for his talent, Albert never asked for payment.

"I wouldn't charge them. There was little or no money [in the area]."

It wasn't money which drove him. "It was fun for me."

Starr speaks about a haircut in the language of an artist. "In church I would always admire the smooth lines of a good haircut, the way the sideburns were squared off." To him, the electric razor is to the barber as the brush is to the painter. "I wanted so much to make a pretty haircut."

While in high school and until being drafted into World War II, Starr worked at Tribble's Barbershop. After serving as an army technician in the South Pacific, he went to barbering school in Winston-Salem, and then began practicing at Merrick's

"Families will attach themselves to you early," Starr explains. "It's a chance to watch the little ones grow up."

And it's kids who do the strangest things. Once Starr attempted to cut the hair of a young boy who protested having to sit on a board which raised him up. His grandparents begged, pleaded, even bribed him. There was no convincing the boy. Finally, they came to a compromise.

"He stood up straight in the middle of the chair and I cut his hair that way."

Every little moment of my time is crammed into trying to get something done.

Albert Starr University barber

Barbershop in Wilmington, N.C.

When he eventually arrived at the University in March of '69, Starr was the first black barber to appear at the shop. The University was slowly being integrated, and the shop needed him.

"Segregation had kept the white guys from doing the black guys' hair," Starr explains. As a result, a growing portion of the University population didn't have anyone who knew how to cut their hair until Starr came along.

Starr has cut hair of all kinds since then. Some of his best-known clients have been Duke football players who went on to the pros: Sonny Jurgensen, Danny Lee, Bob Broadhead and Ray Cauldin. Equally meaningful to him are the generations of families which have come to him through the years.

In this way, a loyal customer was born. "[People] stick with a barber. I know barbers who have customers who wouldn't think of getting their hair cut by anybody else." Several of his own customers will suffer long hair while they are out of town before allowing another barber to cut it, Starr says.

Starr is a walking history book of hair. He remembers the '30s and '40s, when short hair for men was the rule. Women wore styles with names like barsh-bobs, pongeys, pageboys and wedges.

In the '50s, hair changed with the music. Hair became longer, fuller. Men grew "mutton chops." They started growing mustaches and beards.

Then came the '60s. With all the attention on Vietnam, people may have overlooked another conflict worth note: the Barber-Hippie War.

Real fights would break out over how much hair a barber would cut.

"It was just an alarming situation," says Starr. "It made a difference in the shop. There were arguments . . . barbers who would say, 'If you sit in my chair, I'm going to cut all your hair off.'" Such ultimatums rarely worked, says Starr. "Those were generally the barbers who went out of business. Many barbers got so disgusted with that long hair stuff they just quit."

They were over-reacting, Starr says. "Once you convinced [a hippie] that you weren't going to cut all their hair off, they'd stick with you."

Battles in the barbershop are par for the course. "Something new is always happening in a barbershop." Jokes, gossip, stories abound. "Right now the most up-front conversation is the economy," he says. "People are really concerned."

The old conversations will always be talked about. "Who's breaking up, who's leaving who, young boys wrecking cars and wreaking havoc in the family," Starr says. "[The customer] shares the woes and happy times with you."

Starr, a man who still has his hair, describes himself as a workaholic. Before arriving at the barbershop five mornings out of the week, the 66 year-old delivers the Durham Herald-Sun newspaper to 170 homes. "Every little moment of my time is crammed into trying to get something done," he says. When he has time off, he works at home, where he lives with his wife and two of his three children.

Starr says he will cut hair as long as he is able. "You can't hardly find someone to replace a barber when he retires," he says, ruefully.

Businesses required to provide equal access for disabled

By STEVEN HOLMES
N.Y. Times News Service

The first major phase of what has been called the most sweeping anti-discrimination law since the Civil Rights Act of 1964 began Sunday, requiring businesses to give equal access to millions of disabled Americans.

The public accommodations provisions of the law, the Americans with Disabilities Act, mean more than merely providing adequate parking spaces or ramps for the handicapped.

Restaurants may have to provide Braille or large-type menus for the blind or visually impaired or require waiters to read the menus; banks may have to lower some automatic teller machines so they can be reached by people in wheelchairs; movie theaters may have to provide space for customers in wheelchairs and insure that their friends and family may sit with them.

Because the law is written broadly, it is unclear precisely what businesses must do to comply. And advocates for the disabled and business representatives are unsure how aware businesses are of the law.

For businesses like the IGA supermarket on the north side of Oklahoma City that have already gone far to accommodate the disabled, the law may bring even more changes.

The supermarket is "like a dream" for Mary Westphal, who has used a wheelchair since being stricken with polio as a child. Its six-foot-wide checkout lanes and electrically powered cart with a large shopping basket provided by the store make shopping far easier than at any other grocery store she has been in.

But sitting in her wheelchair, Westphal cannot reach the roll of plastic bags over the meat counter. She cannot see some of the items in the frozen juice bin and she cannot stretch far enough to get to the large plastic cups on the top shelves.

"We like to have picnics," she said in exasperation, "and I always end up using the small styrofoam cups because I can't reach any of the others."

The law, passed by Congress on July 13, 1990, and signed by President Bush 13 days later, bans discrimination on the basis of physical or mental handicap in employment, public accommodations, transportation or telecommunications services.

And because the public accommodations section of the law will eventually apply to all businesses regardless of size, legal experts say it may have the most impact of any of the statute's provisions.

"Public accommodation is so broadly defined," said Gary Marx, a Washington lawyer who has conducted seminars for businesses to acquaint them with the law. "It includes lawyers' offices, doctors, accountants, cleaners, stores, restaurants, movie theaters, any place that people go to buy goods and services."

Under the law, newly constructed businesses and those undergoing major renovations must be completely accessible to those with physical handicaps. All existing commercial establishments must do what is "readily achievable" including making physical alterations, to accommodate the disabled. The law left to the courts to decide what is "readily achievable."

For example, a major supermarket chain might be required to place in new or renovated stores signs that will show pictures of items that are in a given aisle. Using such signs would accommodate shoppers with dyslexia or mental retardation who might not be able to read.

Exemptions for small companies will be phased out in a year.

In New York many retailers, including J.C. Penney, Tiffany & Co. and Sears have installed widened doors, Braille signs in elevators and restrooms and have lowered their counters to comply with the act.

But many other businesses are having trouble interpreting the law, said Ronald J.H. Napal, a director of United Cerebral Palsy of New York City.

Officials of his organization, armed with a checklist of items that included proper parking spaces, sloped curbs, and restroom and elevator accessibility, recently inspected a variety of local businesses to determine whether the disabled could use public accommodations as easily as any other person.

Filipino presidential campaign developing into a free-for-all

By PHILIP SHENON
N.Y. Times News Service

MANILA, Philippines—The first presidential campaign in the Philippines since this nation rose up to topple the Marcos dictatorship in 1986 is developing into a free-for-all in which victory will depend more on traditional political deal-making than on debate over proposals to ease the plight of the country's tens of millions of poor.

The two candidates who top voter opinion surveys—a grade B movie star who is sometimes described as the Ronald Reagan of the Philippines and a former immigration commissioner who is portraying herself as a dogged corruption fighter—are being written off because they lack the backing of a large political machine.

Sensitize rush

Sorority rush will always be a traumatic experience for many freshmen and sophomore women who are trying to choose a group of friends meant to last the rest of their lives during a hectic two weeks.

The rush reform committee made some changes in this year's rush process in an effort to lessen the degrading effects of rush. For the most part, the changes seem to have had a positive effect. The committee should be commended for addressing the problem and taking steps to improve rush.

One of the changes the committee made, however, is a step backwards rather than forwards. Bringing all the rushees to Von Canon in the Bryan Center to receive their invitations to the next round of parties—or not receive their invitations as the case may be—intensifies the trauma for those who do not get invited back to the sororities of their choice.

In the past, the rush counselors visited each rushee in her dorm room where they could have privacy to talk or the rushee could be alone if she wanted to. The committee decided to change the process because the Panhellenic Council had received many complaints about rush counselors shirking their responsibilities.

Meeting in Von Canon ensures that the rush counselors meet with each rushee individually and often, but it limits the time a rushee can spend with her counselor and virtually does away with the comparative privacy of a dorm room.

Ideally, the rushees would be able to put the whole process in perspective and realize that it will not be the end of the world if they do not join their favorite sorority, or any sorority at all for that matter.

But perspective is something that comes with time and often age. It is unrealistic to think that anything will considerably diminish the importance of these two weeks in the minds of the rushees, or diminish their pain and disappointment at getting cut from a group of women. After all, the results of these two short weeks will have an effect on their lives for the next four years and beyond.

When the rushees are forced to go to the Bryan Center to receive their invitations, cuts and schedules, both the happy and unhappy rushees must share the walk or bus ride home. For the rushee who just got cut from the last sorority she liked, it will be a long journey home. She may not want to share her schedule with all her friends. What will she say, though, when they ask about it?

Certainly a similar situation exists with the older system of visiting the dorms, but on a much smaller scale. The committee was right that the process needed to be changed, but this change was unsuccessful. The committee should reconsider its decision to carry on rush counseling in the Bryan Center and look for a better way to minimize the unpleasant aspects of rush.

Article on students accused of cheating inadequately researched, classmate says

To the editor:

As a Project Calc student and a classmate of the two students who allegedly "cheated" on a lab assignment, I could not help being shocked and appalled by The Chronicle's poorly researched, amateurish coverage of this unfortunate incident. The Chronicle unilaterally condemned the students but offered no real insight into the case itself. A full understanding of the nature of Project Calc is necessary to understand the incident and the motivations which facilitated it.

Project Calc is designed to encourage collaboration and an open exchange of ideas among students. With regard to the labs, there is no restriction against any student seeing or using another student's lab materials. Out of a class of 16 lab groups, only one or two used a password. If the students had been able to contact Mr. Carroll or any other student via telephone, getting the lab materials would have been simple and quite legal. The "cheating" stemmed from a laziness and a sincere belief that using the lab materials would not be viewed as cheating, since there is no regulation regarding the use of others' labs. Since Mr. Carroll had previously approved the use of said materials, the students did not feel the materials were especially off limits, even though there was a password. Although there was deception involved, the students would not have deceived Ms. George if they felt the use of the materials could be construed as cheating. The fact that the lab was worth a whopping 1.4 percent of our grade indicates that any reasonable student would not risk his or her career for such a inconsequential grade.

Instead of researching these easily accessible facts of the case, The Chronicle chose to establish its own theory and twist the facts to support its position rather than giving the case the thorough analysis it deserved. In printing the students' names and effectively ruining their reputations, The Chronicle rendered a slanted, distorted picture of the facts. Similarly, The Chronicle's attempts to cast aspersions on Professor Holland's ability to judge the case fairly were factually unsound. Once again, The Chronicle's primary focus on building up their own image and public profile overshadowed its shaky commitment to truthful journalism and reporting.

Professor's comments belittle war's cost

To the editor:

I am writing to call to your attention the latest thing to disgrace our university. His name is Dr. Timothy Lomperis. On Jan. 16 Dr. Lomperis appeared on a local newscast along with a couple of other Duke professors to discuss the Gulf War "one year later." This sort of treatment of the war, as though it were completely in the past, is itself appalling; today, maybe as you read this, Iraqi civilians are dying from diseases that are spreading due to the obliteration of Iraq's infrastructure by Allied bombing raids. Since the end of bombing, over 100,000 Iraqi children under the age of five have died because of the war's effects (according to the Jan. 15 edition of The Guardian). In other words, the Iraqi people continue to be victimized by a kind of "bacteriological warfare" (Noam Chomsky's phrase) waged predominantly by the United States.

What spurred this letter, however, is the way that Dr. Lomperis justified the war when he was on the newscast. He argued that the war was good because it gave the United States military the opportunity to test its weapons and weapons systems. Now I realize that this is the "expert opinion" of a professor at a very prestigious university, but I cannot help thinking that something about it is lunacy of the highest order. Indeed, the professor's argument seems to be devoid of intellectual seriousness, and as for its moral adequacy, well, I'll leave that for you to consider.

Being as multicultural as the next person, I understand that rednecks deserve a place in the academy (even if some people say they have dominated it for far too long). But honestly, doesn't Dr. Lomperis's recent performance give a bad name to a school whose motto is "Eruditio et Religio"?

Wake mourns another loss

By MATTHEW HAIES

Slightly more than five minutes into the second half of the men's basketball team's 84-68 victory over Wake Forest Saturday afternoon, Christian Laettner was called for charging into Demon Deacon forward Chris King. If the call had gone against King, Laettner would have had the opportunity to complete a three-point play, and King would have been banished to the bench with his fourth foul.

No matter. Laettner just walked back up court, smiling. The smile was one of confidence, of a man who knew exactly what to do the next time down the floor. The senior center, who stands on the brink of becoming only the seventh player in Atlantic Coast Conference history with 2,000 points and 1,000 rebounds, calmly scored the Blue Devils' next four points, including a soft turnaround jumper while surrounded by three Wake Forest jerseys.

The jumper sparked a 27-8 Duke run that extended a tenuous eight-point lead into a very comfortable 27-point cushion and assured the top-ranked Blue Devils (14-0, 8-0 ACC) of their 20th consecutive victory, the longest win streak in the country.

"Laettner played pretty well" said Duke head coach Mike

Krzyzewski with a laugh. "Sometimes in coaching Christian I probably don't say enough good things about him, but he's just been consistently excellent."

Laettner paced a balanced Blue Devil attack, as all five starters reached double figures. Seventeen of Laettner's game-high 25 points were scored in the first half, including a perfect 3-of-3 performance from behind the three-point arc. For the game Duke shot an impressive 62.5 percent from three-point range, as the Blue Devils took advantage of their perimeter opportunities.

"You've got to hope they don't shoot well, but they did," said Wake Forest head coach Dave Odom.

Krzyzewski was particularly pleased with sophomore Grant Hill's willingness to take the open jumper.

"Grant took a couple of outside shots that I wish he'd take more of," Krzyzewski said. "He took them with confidence."

Hill's strong play along the perimeter came out of necessity, as Bobby Hurley was sent to the bench just 1:45 into the contest after picking up his second foul. Hurley was replaced by Tony Lang, who took Hill's position in the frontcourt, while the 6-8 Hill moved to the point.

"Grant comes into the game getting psyched up to try to guard [6-7, 235-pound] Rodney Rogers, and all of a sudden, two minutes into the game, he's guarding [5-11] Derrick McQueen," Krzyzewski said. "And then he went back to guarding Rogers."

"I really like that. For a sophomore to be able to do that is fantastic."

As Hurley watched from the bench, Hill led the Duke club nearly flawlessly for more than seven minutes. He registered three of his six assists in that span, including a crisp entry pass to Laettner for a dunk that gave the Blue Devils a 17-14 lead. That would be the smallest advantage Duke would hold for the rest of the afternoon.

The teams traded baskets early. King's deuce off the opening tip was quickly answered by Thomas Hill's trifecta from the right wing. Wake then ran off the next four points, on two thunderous dunks by Rogers which gave Wake a 6-3 lead.

Rogers, a graduate of Durham's Hillside High School, hurt Duke early, popping for eight points in the first 5:30 of the contest. His short jumper with slightly less than four minutes gone by gave

Darlington, Diacont not enough to overcome Virginia

By ERIC JONES

By the time Blayne Diacont swaggered to the mat for the wrestling team's 158-pound match against Virginia Saturday in Cameron Indoor Stadium, strategy had flown the coop. Things were not going according to plan.

The Cavaliers had won four straight bouts at the lower weights to take a 12-6 lead. And though Diacont managed to ride Virginia's Trevor Johnson for an entire period on his way to a 5-3 victory, the Blue Devils would win just one more match and end up with a 20-14 loss.

Lightweights Mike Darlington, Lenny LoCastro and Keith Pavlick had all dropped down a weight class in hopes of gaining an advantage on the Cavaliers that would translate into an early lead.

Indeed, Darlington toyed with Greg Douglas in the 118-pound match before stacking Douglas' body on his neck for a six-point pin early in the second period.

But LoCastro (126), Eric Richter (134), Pavlick (142) and Dan Lilley (150) lost consecutive decisions to give Virginia a lead it would not relinquish.

"At 126 and 134, we knew they were tough," Diacont said. "But at 142 and 150, I figured we'd split them. I figured my match was going to be a lead increaser. I knew then that we were in trouble."

Virginia (1-3 overall, 1-0 in the Atlantic Coast Conference) secured its first win of the season in the ACC opener for both squads. Duke (6-2, 0-1) was frustrated and bewildered.

"If someone had showed us a tape [prior to the match] of how we were going to wrestle, we would have put all our money on us today," said Pete Ackerman, who tied Cavalier Jeff Liebel at 190. "I didn't think there was as much possibility of us losing when we wrestled this well."

Duke head coach Bill Harvey said Blue Devil losses at 142 and 167 played a pivotal role in the outcome.

Virginia 142-pounder Chris Jordan jumped to a 5-0 lead early in the first period by taking an unaware Pavlick down with a deep single-leg shot and then putting him on his back with a half-nelson.

After Pavlick pulled within one point in the final period, Jordan headlocked the desperate Blue Devil for a takedown and an 8-4 win.

"Had that one gone our way," Harvey said, "that would have turned it all around."

Harvey said the same of Craig Girvan's loss to Howie Miller at 167.

In the match, referee Mike Rollins signaled a takedown for Girvan with no time left on the clock. After speaking with the timekeeper, Rollins decided Girvan had not gained control in time, and took back the two points.

Miller's 7-5 victory put Virginia ahead 16-9 in the team scoring.

"You shouldn't say anything about the referees because sometimes you beat yourself," Harvey said. "But we had a guy that finished [his move] up and should have been awarded."

Ode Pritzlaff, wrestling at 177 pounds, scored the third of Duke's three individual wins, beating Cavalier Jim Novak 9-7. Blue Devil heavyweight Eric Emsick lost 7-3 in the final bout.

Pritzlaff praised his roommate and co-captain, Darlington, for managing to lose eight pounds in order to wrestle at 118. Darlington, who said he had not been that light since his senior year in high school, worked out three times a day last week.

"I thought he handled it really well," Pritzlaff said. "I was expecting him to be Mr. Hyde, but he did it like a champ all week."

The Blue Devils are excited about it, too. Duke assistant coach Dan Drexler said he assumed Darlington would wrestle in the 118-pound class in March at the ACC tournament, where the top two finishers advance to NCAAs.

"At this point he's got to be looking at what he can do nationally if he gets the chance," Drexler said.

But as a team, the Blue Devils may have missed their best chance at an ACC dual-meet win on Saturday.

"Anyone that knows our team and the ACC knows this was the most important match of our season," Ackerman said.

CHAD STURGILL/THE CHRONICLE

Duke's Craig Girvan had apparently pinned UVa's Howie Miller in the waning seconds of their match Saturday night. But, the timekeeper's decision to disallow the pin gave Miller a 7-5 victory.

Jones, Donohoe pace men's track

By LEWIS KRAUSKOPF

The men's track team sent seven competitors to the largest indoor track meet in the United States this weekend and returned home with satisfying results. The Blue Devils traveled to the US Air Invitational in Johnson City, Tenn. where more than 2,100 athletes representing 50 colleges competed.

"This is the best competition there is all over the place," said assistant coach Norm Ogilve. "It was a real test for our athletes."

On Friday, the team's performance was highlighted in two events. Senior Randy Jones reached the semifinals of the 55-meter dash, posting a time of 6.41 seconds, right at his seasonal average.

The two-mile relay team, following a good week of practice, improved its time 19 seconds from the week before. The team, comprised of senior Steve Ridley (1:57.4), junior Mark Donohoe (2:02), freshman Brian Sydow (1:58.3), and freshman Pat Kelly (2:01), registered a time of 7:59.8. With the performance of the relay team, coach Ogilve is confident the Blue Devils can score points in this event in Atlantic Coast Conference competition.

Donohoe also ran a personal best in the men's mile, finishing at 4:20.4. In addition, Brad Breedlove, also a wide receiver and kick returner for the Duke football team, made a solid showing in the pole vault with two impressive attempts at 15-6.

Next weekend the team will travel to the Virginia Military Institute relays. This will be the final tune-up for the team before the ACC meet Feb. 14-15, where, after this weekend's demonstration, Ogilve feels the team can compete seriously.

"We feel that we can make a challenge," said Ogilve.

Forbes forsee fortune for track team

By LEWIS KRAUSKOPF

Matched against the most talented athletes in the country, the women's track team gave an exceptional showing this weekend at the US Air Invitational. One half of the Duke runners registered personal-best times at the meet in Johnson City, Tenn.

"The kids handled it well," said coach Mike Forbes. "[It is difficult] to go up there and be in that type of atmosphere and not get shook up."

The team placed in two events this weekend. In the 5,000 meters, Tracy Stevenson finished in sixth place with a time of 18:14.1, her personal best. The 4 X 800-meter relay team, represented by Jeannie McFeely, Joanna Boettinger, Karin Stevens and Vanessa Chartouni, placed ninth with a time of 9:44.21.

McFeely, Chartouni, Karen Kost and Kris Bucher all recorded personal bests in the meet. McFeely (5:07.8) and Chartouni (10:25.7), in addition to the relay, competed in the mile and 3000-meter races, respectively. Kost (11:07.1) and Bucher (18:14.1) ran in the 3000-meter and 5000-

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Imagine this scenario. You've just spent the last five days of your life preparing yourself mentally to battle a 6-7, 235-pound behemoth of a forward. Suddenly, however, that preparation seems all for naught, as you now must stop a quick 5-11 guard.

Imagine it? Heck, Grant Hill lived it Saturday against Wake Forest. In a show of versatility that would have had Dick Vitale convulsing, Hill didn't skip a beat as he went from guarding Rodney Rogers to checking Derrick McQueen and then back to banging with Rodney. He was instrumental in keeping his "teammate" from last year's freshman All-America squad in check.

Oh, and by the way, Hill also added 16 points, on 7-of-10 shooting, hitting from 18 feet out and 10 feet up. He also contributed six rebounds and six assists. Against Boston University earlier in the week he posted similar numbers: 14 points, seven rebounds, and six assists.

For doing everything humanly possible on a basketball court, Grant Hill is the Chronicle's Athlete of the week.

In other events, Renee Stahl (7.77) and Jessica Garruto (7.80) ran in the 55-meter dash, while Chris Stout ran a time of 9.07 seconds in the 55-meter hurdles. In the 200-meter, Garruto and Sharon Croom ran times of 27.92 and 28.01 respectively, while Croom (61.73) and Beth Gadkowski (63.59) competed at 400 meters.

In the mile, Robin Schratte finished behind McFeely with a time of 5:22.90. In the 3000-meter, Holly Ober and Amy Gravitt ran times of 10:54.4 and 11:07.8.

The women will compete next weekend in the Pepsi relays at Virginia Tech, and are looking optimistically towards the remainder of the season.

"We're on track to have a great conference meet," said Forbes.

him six quick points and gave the Deacons what would be their last lead of the game, 10-9.

But when King picked up his third foul, with more than six minutes to go in the first half, Rogers felt the scoring burden fall squarely on his shoulders. Anthony Tucker, Wake's third-leading scorer behind Rogers and King, was rendered ineffective by Duke's aggressive man-to-man pressure. Tucker scored a career-high 31 points in the Deacons' 86-77 victory over the Blue Devils in Winston-Salem last season, but he was held to only four points Saturday, more than nine below his average.

With Rogers getting little scoring help from his frontcourt mates, the sophomore soon found himself the focus of the Duke defense.

"Rodney's got to be one of the top-10 players in the United States," Krzyzewski said. "You just try to limit him a little bit certain times in a game so he doesn't just take over a game. We tried to help out on him inside with Laettner and trying to guard him on the outside with our quickness."

Duke's inside-outside strategy on Rogers paid big dividends. Rogers did not score in the final eight minutes of the first half and scored just two points in the first 15 minutes of the second stanza.

Everybody wants a piece of the national champions

Several hours after the men's basketball team's resounding 84-68 victory over Wake Forest Saturday afternoon, the Florida State Seminoles finished off a 98-76 pasting of N.C. State down in Tallahassee. As the clock wound its way down during that game, when FSU's lopsided margin of victory was already assured, Seminole fans began to chant, "We want Duke!" in anticipation of the Blue Devils' visit to Tallahassee this Thursday for a showdown between the top two teams in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Back in December when No. 1 Duke paid a visit to the University of Michigan, Wolverines Chris Webber, Jalen Rose, et al showed up to play the Blue Devils in special maize-colored uniforms. The Wolverines have not worn those uniforms since. Their loss to Duke on that winter day disappointed Michigan students who had shown up at Crisler Arena as early as 5:00 a.m. to wait in line for the game as a cold sleet fell over them.

After third-ranked Oklahoma State beat Kansas State

Dave Royster

earlier this month, a Cowboy fan was seen holding a sign that read that familiar phrase, "We want Duke." And Duke is not even on OSU's schedule this year.

Ahhh, to play Duke. It seems that more teams want to play Duke than Carolina students who want the Blue Devils' national championship trophies. That is kind of strange considering that the Blue Devils have run to a 14-0 start this season and have been all but invincible in the friendly confines of Cameron Indoor Stadium. Being on the road has not exactly fazed Duke either, as the Blue Devils have gone 6-0 away from home.

The fervor with which opposing teams approach playing Duke is astonishing. The atmosphere in opposing arenas has been frenzied, and teams that venture into Cameron play the Blue Devils like it was their national championship game, much like Wake Forest and Rodney Rogers did Saturday when they came out and emphatically dunked for four of their first six points.

To be a member of this year's Duke team is, quite simply, to be part of a circus. The media surrounds the players after games, showering them with question after question. Throngs of fans await the players after games, seeking autographs and high fives. And the other teams and their fans seem to get mildly excited to play the Blue Devils as well.

One of the prerequisites of being the top-ranked team in the land in today is to be able to handle all the distractions that accompany the honor. And Blue Devils are handling it all quite well.

Under Mike Krzyzewski, Duke basketball has become an attitude, one that takes nothing for granted and mixes a fierce work ethic with an exciting style of play, consisting of ominous defense and a fast-paced, slam-dunking offense. This attitude that Krzyzewski has so perfectly instilled into his players is the cornerstone for his teams' success and has much to do with how well Duke has handled being No. 1 this year.

With every team on Duke's schedule, the Blue Devils have to be ready to play at the highest possible level every night out. A team as talented as Duke is normally subject to letdowns or lack of intensity in games against overmatched opponents. But not this Duke team.

After the Wake game, a reporter asked Krzyzewski how he gets his team to play that hard every game.

Krzyzewski replied, "I have a problem with people saying that kids shouldn't be up to play. Why [shouldn't they]? They love playing. They should be able to play all the time."

This attitude was abundantly in evidence Saturday against the Deacons. Cameron Crazies probably remember Brian Davis rejecting a dunk attempt by Trelonnie Owens not once but twice. They remember the team slapping the floor to intensify their defense in the second half when Duke was already ahead by 16 points.

"When the lights come on, we perform," said Davis, who is one of the 'intensity' leaders on the team. "We work hard in practice. We work all week to play."

And perform they did against Wake. So, for the time being, with every hoops fanatic from Tallahassee to Stillwater wanting a piece of Duke, bring 'em on. This team is up to the challenge.

CLIFF BURNS/THE CHRONICLE

Antonio Lang likes to play, and it shows. Lang came off the bench to tally four points, three assists, two rebounds, two steals and a block in a 84-68 victory over Wake Forest.

Clemson battles a bout of the Dead-Cat Bounce

By MOORARI SHAH

The "Dead-Cat Bounce." Economists recognize this term as a false sign of recovery for an ailing economy, a condition the U.S. economy experienced last fall. Despite the gruesome image it depicts, the dead-cat bounce rather ironically describes the downturns of the men's basketball team's next opponent, the Clemson Tigers.

Two years ago, Clemson coach Cliff Ellis had his team on cloud nine after winning the Atlantic Coast Conference regular-season championship. Since then, however, the Tigers' struggles on and off the basketball court have given the orange-clad faithful in South Carolina nothing but nightmares.

Clemson suffered through its worst season in the Ellis era last year, (11-17 overall, 2-12 in ACC). Worse yet, power forward Wayne Buckingham was the subject of an ongoing NCAA investigation concerning irregularities in his high-school transcript. Then, late in the season, swingman Sean Tyson was expelled from the team after being involved in an assault and battery incident.

So the Tigers have nowhere to go but up, right? Do not be so sure (read: beware the dead-cat bounce). Earlier this season, Clemson showed auspicious signs of vitality by racing out to an 8-1 non-conference mark. But, like a dead cat that falls from a great height (apologies to the animal lovers out there), the Tigers' brief resurgence or "bounce" has given way to yet another fall. After this weekend's 84-71 loss to Maryland, the Tigers' record stands at 9-5 overall and 1-4 in the ACC.

And as if the Tigers needed any other headaches, Buckingham has missed most of the season with a knee injury. In addition, the NCAA has reopened the investigation into his academic file, and Buckingham's remaining year-and-a-half of eligibility is in jeopardy. The Tigers' squad has been further depleted since shooting guard David Young, who averaged 22 points in two games against Duke last year, left school.

Even so, Clemson coaches have tried to put the past behind them.

"I don't think the team is suffering because of the bad luck we've had," said Tigers' assistant coach Larry Brown. "We don't have time to worry about those things with the caliber of competition in the ACC. We need to worry about winning games."

Duke assistant coach Mike Brey considers the job Ellis has done under adverse conditions an excellent one.

"They've had injuries and academic problems, but they play tough," said Brey. "They're very talented, but the thing they lack is experience in the league. Ellis has done an impressive job getting them to play together."

The experience and depth factors for Clemson pose significant problems. Ellis uses an eight-man rotation, and of those eight, five are playing their first season in the ACC. The Tigers rely on freshman center Sharone Wright, a high-school Parade All-America, to provide the bulk of their inside scoring.

"Wright is going to be a great player," said Brey. "He's a big powerful kid, has an excellent turn-around shot and is an excellent rebounder. The way he plays is very similar to the way [former NBA All-Star] Moses Malone played, and if he ever gets that good we're in trouble."

Helping out in the low post is junior college transfer Kevin Hines. Hines has the ability to hit the short jumpers in the lane, which frees up Wright to get many offensive put-backs.

On the perimeter, Clemson uses a three-guard system with Chris Whitney, Eric Burks and Andre Bovain. All three can handle the ball, and individually, they specialize in other aspects of the game.

Whitney, another junior college transfer, is unconscious from behind the three-point arc and has the ability to knock it down from NBA range. Burks drives to the basket well and normally directs the offense. Bovain's defensive quickness can give opponents fits.

"The one thing that concerns us is the match-up problems they pose on the perimeter," said Brey. "Just like we did against UNC-Charlotte, we'll be guarding smaller, quicker guys that can go one-on-one and drive to the basket well. They're not afraid to do it either."

Radio: WDNC-620 AM
Series record: Duke leads, 70-23

Where: Cameron Indoor Stadium
Television: WRAL-TV Cable 12
Last meeting: Duke won, 79-62

CLEMSON TIGERS (9-5)

Head coach: Cliff Ellis (Florida State, 1968)
Career college coaching record: 310-75, 17th season
Record at Clemson: 139-91, 8th season

Probable starters:

Guard—Eric Burks, 6-3, 185, So. (10.6 ppg, 2.5 rpg)
Guard—Chris Whitney, 6-0, 168, Jr. (14.1 ppg, 3.4 rpg)
Forward—Andre Bovain, 6-1, 170, So. (9.4 ppg, 3.8 rpg)
Forward—Kevin Hines, 6-7, 240, Jr. (5.6 ppg, 4.4 rpg)
Center—Sharone Wright, 6-10, 250, Fr. (13.2 ppg, 7.8 rpg)

Strengths

Sharone Wright is a legitimate freshman-of-the-year candidate. His style of play has been compared to that of former NBA All-Star Moses Malone. Wright will pose problems for the Blue Devils down in the low post.

Guard play for Clemson will be crucial. Chris Whitney can shoot the rock. Do not be surprised if Whitney fires from three or four feet behind the three-point line. And makes it. Eric Burks can go one-on-one with anyone. And will. Andre Bovain has a knack for being around the ball. And stealing it. Clemson's three-guard attack will give Duke some match-up problems and may temporarily keep this game close.

Cliff Ellis always has his teams prepared to do battle. From the opening tap until final second ticks off the clock, expect nothing less than 110 percent from the Tigers.

Weaknesses

Youth in the ACC tends to be fatal, and it will most likely doom the Tigers tonight. Five of the eight players in Clemson's rotation are in their first year of ACC competition. The two players that were supposed to provide a foundation for the Tigers this year, David Young and Wayne Buckingham, are gone for the season. Clemson does have several junior college transfers, but they just do not have enough game experience to compete with the best in the nation.

Appraisal

Clemson will lose, definitely by a lot. By over 20 points based on the Blue Devils' average margin of victory in Cameron this year. Clemson deserves some respect though. Ever since winning the ACC regular-season championship two years ago, the program has undergone nothing but struggles. An upset win in Cameron would undoubtedly put an end to the misery. But, it will not happen this year. Duke by a bunch.

By Reva Bhatia

Guard Steve Harris along with forwards Devin Gray and Corey Wallace give the starters a breather when necessary, but the Tigers' bench wears thin after that.

For the Blue Devils, rebounding and bench play are again the points of emphasis, as they were against Wake Forest.

"We're keeping a close eye on our kids coming off the bench," said Brey. "We need to have production and intensity from them. Our goal is to have our bench match the effort of our starters."

For the Tigers, an upset win over the top-ranked and undefeated Blue Devils in Cameron Indoor Stadium would certainly put a halt to the dead-cat bounce.

"We're just looking to play our game and do the things we can do," said Brown. "We can't cheat on any Duke players because they're such tremendous athletes. We just hope they have a bad game, and we can get some momentum."

Redskins romp to Super Bowl victory behind Rypien

By DAVE GOLDBERG
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The no-names on Washington's defense were too much Sunday for Buffalo's no-huddle offense.

The Redskins won their third Super Bowl in 10 years, 37-24, putting the game away with 24 straight points after a scoreless first period in which they blew two touchdown chances.

The Bills, one-point losers to the New York Giants in the Super Bowl a year ago, never were in this meeting of the teams with the two best records in the NFL. Only two touchdowns late in the fourth quarter made it seem that way.

This Washington win was as much the work of obscure defenders like Kurt Gouveia, Brad Edwards, Fred Stokes, Jason Buck, Alvoid Mays and Andre Collins as any of the team's stars.

"Our defensive guys gave them a lot of looks and I think that held them," Redskins coach Joe Gibbs said.

Rypien and the Posse

Sure, MVP Mark Rypien was 18 of 33 for 292 yards and two touchdowns as Washington ran the NFC's streak in the NFL's marquee game to eight straight.

Sure, the "Posse" — receivers Art Monk, Gary Clark and Ricky Sanders — led a 17-point explosion in 5 minutes, 45 seconds of the second quarter after a scoreless first period. That surge saw the Redskins use the no-huddle offense themselves in a modified reprise of their record 35-point second quarter in their Super Bowl rout of Denver four years ago.

And sure, Rypien hit Clark with a 30-yard TD pass with 1:24 left in the third quarter after Buffalo had cut a 24-0 lead to 24-10.

But just as important was the work of a blitzing defense that shut down the NFL's most explosive offense until the Redskins had that lead.

It sacked Jim Kelly five times, got four interceptions — two by Edwards, one of five Plan B free agents who start on defensive coordinator Richie Petitbon's unit. It also forced a fumble in helping Gibbs to his third Super Bowl win, tied with San Francisco's Bill Walsh and one behind Pittsburgh's Chuck Noll on the all-time list.

Machine-Gun Kelly

Kelly set a Super Bowl record by throwing 58 times, and completed only 28 for 275 yards.

It held Thurman Thomas, the league's MVP this year, to just 10 yards in eight carries through the first three quarters, limiting the league's leading running game to just 15 yards over that period and without a rushing first down until midway through the third.

Thomas finished with only 13 yards on 10 carries, and was never a factor, either. "We gave them a lot of different window dressing. I think we confused them early on," defensive end Charles Mann said.

Frustrated them, as well. Trailing 17-0 and having had a couple of officials' calls go against them, Bills coach Marv Levy railed at the refs as the half ended, and television cameras caught him apparently shouting "you've been bought" at field judge Ed Merrifield.

It got even worse for the Bills before it got better.

On the first play of the second half, Gouveia returned an interception forced by Collins' blitz to the 1. That set up Gerald Riggs' second 1-yard TD run for a 24-0 lead.

The defense did it again when Mays sacked Kelly, forcing a fumble that was recovered by Stokes. That set up Chip Lohmiller's 25-yard field goal that made it 34-10 six seconds into the fourth quarter. And the third was Edwards' second interception, tipped to him by Martin Mayhew and returned 35 yards. That set up Lohmiller's 39-yard field goal for 37-10.

"Early on, they put some pressure on me," Rypien said. "But they didn't get to me. We were still able to make some plays."

And that more than made up for Buffalo's one quick offensive spurt — a run of 10 points that followed the Gouveia-Riggs touchdown.

And even then the defense contributed, stopping the Bills at the 3-yard-line and forcing them to settle for Scott Norwood's 21-yard field goal that made it 24-3.

Then Thomas capped an 55-yard TD drive with a 1-yard run. The score was set up by a 29-yard pass interference call.

Bizarre Start

The game got off to a bizarre start and continued that way through the first quarter.

First, Buffalo's Brad Daluiso was forced to kick off twice because his first was ruled an "inadvertent kickoff" because referee Jerry Markbreit was out of position. And, Thomas missed the Bills' first two offensive plays because he couldn't find his helmet under the Buffalo bench.

Washington then blew two scoring chances.

First the Redskins drove 87 yards to the Buffalo 2 with Monk catching 4 passes for 79 yards in the drive.

On third down, Rypien hit Monk in the back of the end zone, but replay official Cal Lepore overturned the TD because Monk's foot was on the rear line. It was the first touchdown reversed by replay in Super Bowl history.

Lohmiller came in for a 19-yard attempt, and that was aborted when John Brandes' snap went right through the hands of holder Jeff Rutledge.

The Redskins got another chance a play later when Darrell Green tipped Kelly's pass and Edwards returned it 23 yards to the Buffalo 12. But two plays later, Rypien's third-down pass hit guard Mark Schlereth in the helmet and Kirby Jackson picked it off for the Bills.

But Buffalo was going nowhere.

Even though the Bills got good field position early, they didn't get into the Redskins' territory until 3:10 remained in the half. That drive, typically, was aborted by an 11-yard sack by Buck, who was picked up after being released in preseason by Cincinnati, a 3-13 team this year.

Later, Wilber Marshall, one of the defense's few name players, sacked Kelly and Edwards knocked away a pass to keep the score 17-0 in a first half also marked by Buffalo mistakes — dropped passes by Don Beebe and Keith McKeller that might have gotten the Bills back into the game.

Beebe also dropped a pass in the end zone in the third quarter drive.

Washington finally made it 3-0 1:58 into the second quarter on Lohmiller's 34-yarder, set up by a 19-yard run by Earnest Byner and a 41-yard pass from Rypien to Sanders. But a holding penalty on Jeff Bostic and two incomplete passes kept them from more.

The Skins got the ball right back after a 23-yard punt by Chris Mohr and finally took it to the end zone, going to the no-huddle and driving 51 yards on five plays. Rypien hit Byner in the flat, he caught it at the 7 and dove into the end zone.

Then Green picked off Kelly on his own 45 and five plays later it was 17-0. Riggs went over from the 1 after Rypien hit Gary Clark for 34 yards to the 15 and Ricky Ervins added 14 more.

Top-ranked Terrapins race past women's basketball

By MICHAEL KRACHON

The top-ranked team in America coasted to another easy victory in Cameron Indoor Stadium this past weekend. The team did it on the strength of a 17-2 run which began the second half. It also did it with a suffocating defense and a clicking transition game. But here is the catch. The team did it on Friday night, not Saturday afternoon.

That's right, on Friday night the No. 1 women's team in the nation, the red-hot Maryland Terrapins, rolled, 80-54, past Duke. With the victory, Maryland's record stands at 15-1 overall and 6-0 in the Atlantic Coast Conference. The Blue Devils are 11-6, 3-4 in the ACC.

The road does not get any easier for Duke in the next two weeks, as the Blue Devils will face second-ranked Virginia twice, and meet Maryland again in College Park, Md.

The Terps came out of the blocks rolling, jumping out to a 12-2 lead before the Blue Devils could even break a sweat. Maryland opened the game in a swarming 1-2-1-1 fullcourt press which dropped back into a tight player-to-player defense.

"[Maryland] was just dominating in the paint," said Duke head coach Debbie Leonard. "They did an excellent job of rebounding, and we were not aggressive enough in the paint. Tonight we were simply outplayed by a much better team. This is without a doubt the best team I have seen at Maryland."

After an early timeout, the Blue Devils appeared to settle down, and started to make a run of their own. Trailing 24-10, Celeste Lavoie hit a short baseline jumper to get things started. Then, after two Maryland free throws, Lavoie again answered for Duke to make it 26-14. Defensively, the Blue Devils held the next two times down the court, while on the offensive end senior Robin Baker scored on two successive moves to the hoop to put the Blue Devils within eight, 26-18.

Duke had an opportunity to close the gap to six when Dana McDonald stole a Maryland pass and fed Baker for what should have been an easy layup. However, the Terrapins hustled back on defense, Baker missed the shot after double pumping and Maryland stormed back on offense.

Maryland All-America Jesse Hicks, who would finish second on the team with 14 points to go along with a team-high 11 rebounds, scored from the paint to push the lead back to double digits. That is where the margin would remain until halftime as the Terps took a 38-26 lead into the locker room.

"Hicks is impossible to guard in the paint," said Leonard. "She has long arms and is a great rebounder. She could carry the Burge [Heather and Heidi, the 6-4 twin forwards from Virginia] sisters, one on each shoulder."

The second stanza would be all Maryland, as the Terrapins came out on a mission. Hicks scored twice before Duke had even crossed halfcourt. Malissa Boles added a third deuce to the board before the clock had recorded one minute of play in the second half.

McDonald responded with a jump shot from the baseline to close the score to 44-28 with just under 18 minutes to play. She scored again from the baseline with about 15 minutes remaining. Sandwiched in between those two scores were 11 Maryland tallies. When the dust had settled and the run had ended with a trey from Kristina Meiman, the score read 62-30. The game was all but over.

Make no mistake about it, the Blue Devils were soundly defeated, but things could have been closer. To be sure, the Blue Devils forced 20 Maryland turnovers, while committing 18. The Blue Devils also shot a horrendous 33.8 percent from the field, while Maryland shot 56.8 percent. Worse, the Terps outrebounded Duke 45-29.

"We were just not able to rebound the ball," said Leonard. "That was the key. We did not rebound the ball at all, we were not nearly aggressive enough on the boards."

The Blue Devils were able to shut down Maryland's Limor Mizrachi by using a box-and-one, with Susan Brandau or Baker holding the outside threat of Mizrachi to two early points and just two assists.

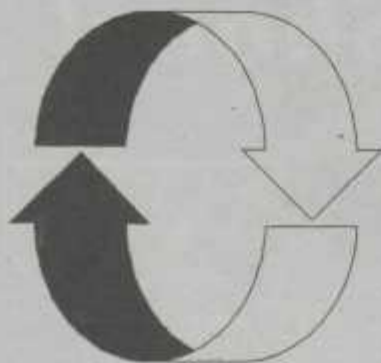

The Blue Devils were forced to play most of the game without the services of 6-2 freshman Carey Kauffman, who was forced to leave the game early in the first half with a sprained ankle.

Duke also was forced to play without the full strength of Monika Kost. Kost sprained her ankle last Tuesday in Tallahassee, Fla. against Florida State. Kost did play 22 minutes against the Terps and scored five points while snaring five rebounds.

The Blue Devils have a week to recuperate before taking on No. 2 Virginia in Cameron next Saturday.

Seminoles stalk on the warpath

From wire reports

(AP) — The school that's expected to become a dominant force in Atlantic Coast Conference football is already proving to be a worthy combatant in basketball.

Florida State (12-4, 5-2) put five players in double figures and took sole possession of second place in the ACC with a 98-76 victory Saturday over North Carolina State. Coach Pat Kennedy said the key to victory was carrying out all facets of the game plan.

"One was to stop Tommy Gugliotta with our defenses. Number two was not to turn the ball over," Kennedy said. "Number three was to control the backboards, and number four was to show offensive patience and good ball movement."

Gugliotta, who averages 24.3 points per game and scored 36 against North Carolina, was held scoreless until he hit a free throw with 1:16 left in the first half. Gugliotta finished with just seven points and was scoreless from 3-point range, but grabbed 10 rebounds.

"My point to him the other day was 'You're not going to get 30 every night. There's going to be nights when you get only 14 and 15. You're human,'" N.C. State coach Les Robinson said. "Tonight was one of those nights."

As for the rest of the game plan, the Wolfpack (9-7, 3-3) committed 20 turnovers compared to 13 for Florida State. The Seminoles held a 44-35 rebounding edge and was patient enough to shoot 51.4 percent from the field.

Sam Cassell scored 23 points, Chuck Graham and Rodney Dobard had 14, and Charlie Ward and Bob Sura scored 10 each for Florida State.

Kevin Thompson's 19 points topped N.C. State.

Also Saturday, No. 10 North Carolina beat Virginia 77-56, and Maryland stopped Clemson 84-71. Outside the league, No. 18 Georgia Tech beat 20th-ranked Louisville 73-65.

Hubert Davis, assuming the reserve's role for the second time in two weeks, scored 19 points as the Tar Heels (14-3, 4-2) went to its trapping defenses to beat Virginia (8-8, 2-4).

The Tar Heels avoided their first 3-3 start in Atlantic Coast Conference play in 26 seasons, while Virginia lost for the 48th time in 52 games in Chapel Hill.

Walt Williams topped the 30-point mark for the fifth straight time, getting 31 as the Terrapins (8-9, 1-6) snapped an eight-game losing streak. Williams made 11 of 15 shots, including 6-for-9 from 3-point range, to help Maryland get their first victory since Dec. 23.

Williams is the first ACC player since David Thompson, in the 1974-75 season, to have at least four consecutive 30-point games.

Chris Whitney led Clemson (9-5, 1-4) with 23 points. The Tigers trailed by only a point with 6:37 left, but made only one basket in the next five minutes.

Jon Barry and James Forrest each scored 19 points for the Yellow Jackets (14-5). Barry hit only three field goals in the game, but all were 3-pointers, and he also hit three of four free throws in the final minute to help the Yellow Jackets avoid a third consecutive loss, and broke Louisville's four-game winning streak.

The next action is tonight, when Duke hosts Clemson, Tennessee is at North Carolina State and Florida State is at Florida.

You can get a lot more out of life when you set your sights a little higher. Which is what applying for the American Express® Card is all about. When you get the Card, it's easier to do the things you want to do. And with the student savings that come along with it, you can do even more.

Fly roundtrip on Continental for less than $100 each way.

Student Cardmembers receive four travel certificates. They can be used to fly anywhere Continental Airlines flies in the 48 contiguous United States. Two for the school year, and two for the summer.*

Depending on where you fly, each school year travel certificate is good for $129 or $189 roundtrip—and each summer travel certificate is good for $149 or $199 roundtrip.

Savings that upgrade your lifestyle.

As a student Cardmember you get more than great travel savings. You also save money on everything from clothing to long distance phone calls. All for a $55 annual fee.

Obviously, savings like these say a lot about the value of the Card. And having the Card will say a lot about you. For one thing it says you have a handle on what you spend, so you don't have to carry over a balance. It also says you're smart enough not to pay interest charges that can really add up.

So take a few minutes now to call (have your bank address and account number ready), and apply for the American Express Card.

With all that the Card offers you, not even the sky is the limit.

Choosing to be a grad student means social martyrdom

Every once in a while, we all have experiences that make us wish that we could just return to the womb and forget this whole "life" thing. These are the experiences which parents like to call stepping stones, or rites of passage, or any other euphemism that they can think of to make the concept of growing up and paying your own bills sound appealing.

So far, we've all managed to get through the first day of kindergarten, the puberty thing (well, most of us), and getting into Duke. So, here we are at this brain farm, thinking that we're set from here on out.

Then somewhere in the middle of junior year you start realizing that your major hasn't prepared you for anything but more school, or working in the mall.

So, just when you'd almost forgotten what the SAT and college applications look like, you get to go through the whole process again for grad school. The prospect of this task makes you want to call up whoever declared that you were smart in the first place, and put a curse on their descendants.

Well, this is the stage of life that most of my friends and I are going through right now. In fact, I have to finish up a lot of the paper work this weekend. And there's always so much information to be considered: personal statements, recommendations, GRE scores, psychiatric reports and blood tests. Of course, after all that they could still reject you if they don't like your mother's maiden name. I'll admit I exaggerated on those last three, but one of my applications did ask for my mother's maiden name, and I don't understand why. What are they looking for, a criminal record?

□ Random thoughts Stephanie Nevels

Even though I'm applying, the whole idea of me as a grad student is hard to accept. I've spent a good deal of my undergraduate career making fun of grad students. After all, everyone knows that once you start grad school, your life is pretty much over and you become a social leper.

Take Glen, for instance. Glen is a hypothetical composite of a few grad students who I've known in the past. He's usually a nice person, but just a little high strung. I often think that smelling the book mildew in Perkins for too many years has damaged his brain a little. It's either that or maybe his being out in public sends him right into information overload. Anytime he manages to escape from his windowless office, he goes skipping across the quad like the hunchback of Notre Dame (a deformity from wearing a backpack on the same shoulder for too many years) mumbling, "I'm out, I'm out!! I'm never going back, never, never, never!" in a voice that sounds like Elmer Fudd with asthma.

Then there's Glen's social life, which I would go on and on about. That is, I could go on and on about it if he had one. Which he doesn't. Which means that there's not much to say about Glen's social life except to comment on the abysmal lack of it. And going on and on about the lack of someone's social life is kind of a cruel thing to do, even if he is only a composite. Never mind.

Anyway, when I look at people like Glen, it stresses me out because I'm afraid that I'll be sucked into this composite some time in the near future.

I tried to make a list of the advantages and disadvantages of being a grad student. I figured this way I could see some of the virtues of it and not be so anxious about the whole thing. The results:

Advantage: You don't have to worry about fashion.
Disadvantage: The reason you don't have to worry about fashion is because no one sees you.

Advantage: You get student discounts because everyone knows you have no money.

Disadvantage: You have no money.
Advantage: All the professors in your department know you by your full name.

Disadvantage: All the professors in your department know you by your full name.

Basically, by the end of the list, I've come to the conclusion that there aren't really any advantages to being in grad school. Except, of course, that you get to be an expert in a particular field (or at least you learn to sound like one).

I suppose that's all the advantage a person could ask for.

It can't be so bad, just look at all the Glens in the world.

Stephanie Nevels is a Trinity senior who would like to state that Glen is a fictional character, and any similarity between him and any one person is purely coincidental.

Sensitive writer recovers from freshman's virulent attack

Well, here we are again. I've made it through to my second week with only one hate letter to put into my scrapbook. Thanks Anne. Don't you think I'm trying my best? You know it's not easy to be the new kid on the block and all that. I have feelings too. Wimper, wimper, sob, sob (dUb breaks down crying. The big man JB himself enters office, sees dUb crying and comes to his side.)

JB: "What's the matter dUb?" dUb: "I'm trying so hard, and no one likes me. I don't want to do it anymore." JB: "Hey, hey. It's OK. Just give them time. They'll come around." dUb: "Gee, ya' really think so?" JB: "Sure. I know so. Now come on. Wipe your eyes and give one of those big smiles. There we go. Now, get back to work. Don't make me have to use the whip again!"

And I was starting to think that I wasn't loved. My only response to you is that I would like to hear your opinion on how things are handled at Duke after you have been here for four years. Oh, to be young and naive again. To each her own.

Some people are really confused. I am taking a 9 a.m. class two days a week as a matter of necessity. I learned this week that there are people actually fighting to get into this class. God, they must be desperate. Either that, or else all of the other blow-offs must already be filled. Of course, I'm not implying that my class is a blow-off. Let us just say that it is "differently demanding." Might as well stay clear of the PC police.

Speaking of early classes, I couldn't help but notice the article outlining the new set of 8 a.m. classes soon to be instituted. Wow, that sounds like a great administrative change. It's funny. Just the other day I was saying to myself that even though I am taking a 9 a.m. class, so much of my day is being wasted. I would be so much more productive if I could just wake up in the pre-dawn hours, and do more before 6 a.m. than most people do in their entire day.

Beware of Greeks Bearing Gifts: Someone would have to be as clueless as a Tibetan Monk (even one with a three-octave range) not to realize that this past week has been consumed by sorority rush. Everywhere I went this week, people were incessantly talking about rush. The "How was your break rap" of last week has conveniently been converted to the "How is rush going rap" of this week. For the women who were getting called back where they wanted, the conversations were uniform enough. But, for the women who were getting cut from their favorite sororities—and boy, there were a lot of them—the rationalizations were flying like crazy. These rationalizations ranged anywhere from, "Gee, the girls in that sorority were so superficial. I wouldn't have taken their bid anyway. Basically, they saved me the trouble of cutting them," to "You know, I wasn't into rush anyway. I was just doing it to see what it's like. I'll be much happier as an independent. Now, I don't have to go to all of those boring mixers."

I found Bid Night amusing but kind of dull. Bid Night is one of those incredibly overrated nights, up there with

□ Monday, Monday dUb

St. Valentine's Day, New Year's Eve, etc. They say that if you can't get laid on Bid Night at Duke, you can't get laid. I am one of those people who have made it my own personal quest to defy this prophecy. Most of what I witnessed on Saturday night was more along the lines of drunk female pledge grotesquely kissing drunk female sisters, while hordes of drunken guys—both Greek and independent—did their best to pick up anyone and everyone in sight.

Wait, I think I just described a regular night at kegs. Never mind.

For those of you who took bids and are happy, congratulations. However, to those who didn't, don't worry about it. It's really not as big a deal as you think, and you will still have just as many guys hitting on you wherever you go. You just won't have 130 of your closest friends around you constantly to help ward them off. Get directions to Chapel Hill. You'll have more fun going out there, anyway!

Don't worry guys, I won't leave you out. One quick note on all of the shake-ups that occurred this week. It must be a lot of fun to go to a semi-formal with someone you really like, so that you can leave them to fend for themselves while you try to see which of the pledges you can make hit the ceiling first. Never really understood the logic behind that one.

Holy Police Stupidity, Batman: Did anyone else notice the article concerning the James Bonds, Jr. case in Friday's Chronicle? Clear example of complete incompetence. Apparently, the police "accidentally ran over Bonds while looking for him." I think the confusion came in a miscommunication of the instructions they were given. They were told to track Bonds and took this a little bit too literally.

Actually, it's sickening that something like this can happen. It's even more sickening that the police then try to exonerate themselves by claiming that blows already inflicted to Bonds' head by Ramsey, the defendant, would have killed him if the police car didn't act as a "more immediate fatal injury to the torso." Why avoid the inevitable, right guys? Hats off once again to the men in blue.

My prediction for the big game which will already be over by the time you read this is—who cares? If the Jets aren't in it, it won't be a good game anyway.

dUb thinks that if you're going to cheat, so be it, but don't be stupid enough to turn the same paper in to two professors within the same department.

Personality, not policy, becomes center of Filipino election

cians care," said Sylvia Alonzo, a 41-year-old laundress who lives in a large squatter camp three blocks from the presidential offices at Malacanang Palace.

Alonzo, who sleeps at night on the passenger seat of a bicycle-taxi sidecar and who bathes each day with a bucketful of water she buys from a nearby merchant for the equivalent of two or three cents, says she will probably vote for Sen. Joseph Estrada, the actor-turned-politician who is billing himself as a champion of the poor.

"He will help the poor," she said. "Many of the others do not care about the poor."

At least nine major political figures are seeking the presidency, including several of the central figures in the 1986 "people power" revolution that ended with the ouster of President Ferdinand Marcos and the rise to power of his nemesis, Corazon Aquino.

In a scene that would have been unimaginable only months ago, Imelda Marcos, the former first lady and a newly announced presidential candidate, found herself seated at a luncheon in early January between two of the architects of her husband's ouster, Fidel Ramos and Juan Ponce Enrile.

Ramos is running for president; Enrile has considered it. Both served in Aquino's Cabinet as defense secretary.

Lost in the confusion among so many candidates and so many quickly shifting political alliances — there was serious talk this month of a Marcos-Enrile ticket — are issues that should be paramount in a presidential election here.

Among them are economic development in a nation in which the average income is only $700 a year; adequate shelter for the millions of families who are homeless or live in the plywood-and-tin shantytowns found everywhere in the country; new efforts to bring down the birth rate, now among the highest in Southeast Asia; and rampant government corruption.

"Because there are so many candidates, the campaign's emphasis, at least for now, is centering on personalities, not policy," said Alex Magno, a professor of political science at the University of the Philippines. If there is no major shakeout among the candidates, he said, it will be difficult for the campaign to rise above "caricature."

On Saturday, Aquino, who is not seeking re-election, broke with several of her political supporters and family members and endorsed Ramos as her successor in the May 11 election.

Political allies warned Aquino that Ramos, who helped put down six coup attempts against the Aquino government, could not win because he was without the political organization and financial muscle traditionally needed for a presidential race.

Aquino had been urged to throw her support instead to House Speaker Ramon Mitra, who beat Ramos for the nomination of the nation's largest political party, the Struggle of the Democratic Filipino Party.

Greater peacekeeping responsibilities prove costly for U.N. member nations

Sir Brian Urquhart, the former undersecretary general in charge of peacekeeping, complained that peacekeeping operations have always been "run on a shoestring" and argued that governments must be prepared "to put adequate resources behind global and regional security systems."

While countries are assessed contributions to the United Nations regular budget according to their wealth, peacekeeping contributions are divided differently, with the five permanent Security Council members paying relatively more on account of their special responsibility under the charter for preserving international security.

Thus, while the United States pays 25 percent of the regular budget, its percentage of peacekeeping bills is 30.38. Similarly, Russia pays 11.44 percent of peacekeeping costs but 9.41 per cent of the budget. The comparable shares for Britain are 6.10 and 5.02 percent; for France 7.29 and 6.00 percent; and for China 0.94 and 0.77 percent.

Calculating the cost of peacekeeping operations on a year-by-year basis is difficult, budget officials say, because the Security Council frequently mandates a force for a portion of a year or for a period bridging parts of two years. Start-up costs also usually boost expenditure at the beginning of an operation, allowing it to tail away later.

But the cost of the new Cambodian peacekeeping operation, where in addition to sending troops and police, the United Nations must virtually take over the administration of the country as it organizes elections, is informally estimated at between $750 million and $1 billion for the first full year.

PUBLIC POLICY STUDIES

New Course for Spring 1992

PPS 264S.57 Technology and Development (C-L: CAS)
TTH 3:20 - 4:35 p.m.

Instructor: Vijaya Ramachandran

This course examines the role of technological change in economic development. It reviews historical evidence (the industrial revolution in Britain and the path of economic growth in the U. S.), considers the nature of the R&D process, and the transfer of technology to developing countries. Finally, it looks at the policy implications of the above analyses. How should a government intervene in order to facilitate the process of innovation? What are the costs to developing countries that purchase technology abroad? Various policy options are presented and discussed.

Sophomore elected Union president for coming year

Maughan is currently chairman of the On Stage Committee, the newest of the Union committees.

"As chairman, I had a chance to learn how programming works," Maughan said. "The On Stage Committee is a microcosm of the way the entire Union works and has given me an essence of how the Union works."

Talbot credited Maughan's leadership of the committee. "He took the On Stage Committee and gave it his own identity. He has done a great job bringing diverse entertainment events to campus."

Maughan said he considers the greatest success of the committee during his tenure to be the co-sponsorship of a sell-out concert by performance artist, Laurie Anderson.

He said his most important goal as president is to bring all the committees up to the level of the most popular committees, Freewater, Major Attractions and Special Events.

Maughan said he wants the individual Union committees to program events reaching the entire University community, not just undergraduates.

"The Duke University Union is a university union that has a programming responsibility to reach graduate students, employees and staff, professors, and the community in general," Maughan said.

Furthermore, Maughan said he plans to more clearly define positions in the administration of the Union in order to strengthen it. This "will allow programming to be that much easier and efficient," he said.

Maughan will officially receive the title of president on April 1, followed by a short transition period during which Talbot will help Maughan learn the position.

Talbot leaves after a year in which one of the most significant accomplishments of the Union was the allocation of $35,000 of NCAA basketball championship money to student groups outside of the Union.

Talbot said he is also proud of the Union's ability to maintain responsibility for the East Campus Art Gallery. He also helped to oversee the evaluation of the East and West Unions and organized a leadership seminar program with ASDU.
